Passive members as well as FIGU friends, interested parties, supporters, strangers, antagonists or enemies of FIGU and Billy Meier are very often of the opinion that he was given the Hinterschmidrüti farm as a gift. Some believe that the Plejaren ensured that all opposition was swept aside, while others brazenly claim that they know that Billy fleeced his 'sect members' financially in order to buy Hinterschmidrüti in its current state with big money or that the whole thing was given to him by stupid benefactors.

Absolutely none of this is true! The purchase of the Hinterschmidrüti was a joint project from the very beginning. When the first people involved - Billy, Popi (Billy's ex-wife), Jacobus, the two Schutzbach brothers, Claire Frey, Olgi Walder, Amata Stetter, Herbert Runkel, Margreth Flammer, Elsi Moser, Dölf Berroth, Marcel Hirt, the estate agent Hans-Ruedi Glanzmann, Mrs. Herzog, the owner at the time, myself, Bernadette

Brand, and a few others - had finished viewing the farm on January 31, 1977, we sat down in Schmidrüti.

When we had finished inspecting the farm on January 31, 1977, we sat down for a coffee at the Freihof in Schmidrüti. As we sat around the table, Billy asked: "What do you think, do we want to buy it?" Everyone immediately agreed, and so the joint purchase of Hinterschmidrüti was a done deal.

The courtyard and its surroundings were unkempt, neglected, dirty and in some places completely overgrown between the main house and the shed was swampy and riddled with all kinds of poisons up to two meters deep, which had to be dug up and replaced with healthy soil, while the square and the road and path around the house were dirty and ankle-deep in mud. The house itself was not in any better condition, but in a very desolate state, the rooms and the kitchen were dark, dirty and old as stone, and everything was run-down and dilapidated, including the shed extensions to the house, which were on the verge of collapse.

Upstairs there was a stony old outhouse, and on the first floor a toilet attached to the pigsty with an ancient, brittle toilet bowl that broke into several pieces the first time it was used. If you wanted to live here, you had to do something about it first - that much was immediately clear. Nevertheless, the whole thing somehow made an inviting impression on everyone and, what's more, the matter was urgent, because Billy had been given notice to quit his house by the municipality of Hinwil and urgently needed new accommodation for himself and his family from which he could no longer be evicted. However, when we agreed to the purchase, we didn't think about how we were going to raise the purchase price of CHF 360,000, because none of the people involved and those present had sufficient financial resources to buy such a house.

The fact that we were only able to pay for our drinks and the estate agent's coffee by everyone present scraping together the last of their money was symptomatic, as it turned out. In the end, the financing only came about through what was achieved when all members of the group at the time -including Billy, it must be said, put their last savings into the purchase, and those who didn't have any simply took out a loan - the main thing was that Billy and his family could finally have their own home and thus also a center for the mission.

On April 28, 1978, Elsi Moser acted as the buyer or new owner on behalf of all group members vis-à-vis the estate agent, the seller and the authorities, because FIGU did not have legal or signatory powers at the time and was neither entered in the commercial register nor was it an officially authorized legal entity with corresponding articles of association or statutes. Although Billy had already founded the FIGU association in Hinwil on January 28, 1975, the official founding meeting in accordance with Art. 60 ff. of the Swiss Civil Code (ZGB) did not take place until June 17 and August 25, 1978, when the signatures of the founding members were notarized. Officially constituted in accordance with Art. 60 ff. ZGB, the FIGU was not officially constituted until September 21 and November 7, 1981, when the statutes were presented and signed by the then President, Engelbert Wächter, and myself at the notary's office in Turbenthal. However, quite some time was to pass before the FIGU was finally able to buy the Hinterschmidrüti from Elsi Moser, as it was not until April 17, 1985 that the time had finally come. Within 10 years, the deposits of all financially involved parties were repaid.

And all of the repayments were made through self-generated finances, group contributions and savings from all group members, in which Billy was also involved, meaning that neither the group nor Billy were given anything in return. Counter Billy repeatedly turned down various large sums of money that he or the FIGU wanted to be 'given' in order to be able to run the center. However, he always refused, saying that he would not be 'bought', so all the group members, including him, worked out all the financial resources themselves and put them into building the center because we all didn't want to be dependent on outside help.

As I said, the house and the yard were in an absolutely terrible state. The cellar had been under a meter of water for 16 years and first had to be pumped out, which was the first job of Billy in January 1977. He and Jacobus had already carried out the necessary work long before the purchase of the Hinterschmidrüti, because he knew from a preview of the Plejaren that the purchase and construction of the future FIGU Center would work out. And in the course of February, Billy and Jacobus brought the first of countless loads of building materials to Hinterschmidrüti, which he was able to organize in Fällanden from the dissolved construction company Ryf for little money. This was followed by the first loads of a never-ending caravan of concrete and wall gravel transports, construction timber, stairs, bricks, cement, natural stone, sanitary and electrical equipment and a huge amount of tools that would not stop during the first few years. As soon as the first materials had arrived in Hinterschmidrüti, a lively building activity unfolded.

First of all, the house had to be repaired to the extent that it could be occupied. Billy and Jacobus worked from around the beginning of January until they moved in on April 7, 1977.

Monday to Sunday, they worked in and around the house until late in the evening and sometimes well into the night. They worked like slaves so that at least the bare essentials could be prepared before the move-in date. All the rooms were in an extremely desolate, terrible state. The floors were so black with dirt that it was only possible to recognize that they were wooden floors in a few places.

Even after they had been painstakingly sanded down with an industrial machine, they still left a lot to be desired. The dirt had literally eaten into the wood. The wooden walls on the lower floor were partially rotten and in some places there was thick gray mold on the wood. Where the walls were neither rotten nor decayed, they had warped so much that there were often centimeter-wide gaps between the panels. At times, entering the rooms on the upper floor was a real test of courage, as you could never be quite sure when you would end up on the floor below. As it later turned out, the spaces between the walls and floors were stuffed and 'insulated' with fir twigs and sometimes with old paper

- a paradise for mice and one reason why it is still strictly forbidden to smoke or leave candles burning unattended in the house and the coach house, although Billy removed as much of the 'insulating material' from the false floors as possible.

Some of the tiles in the kitchen were loose, and it was almost a miracle that the wooden floor cover to the cellar entrance was still stable and intact, which Billy had concreted over and replaced with an exit door from the kitchen and then concreted a floor slab and a cellar staircase. I would prefer to discreetly pass over the sanitary conditions in silence, but a description of the construction of Hinterschmidrüti also includes this tiresome chapter. As mentioned, there was a so-called latrine on the second floor, i.e. an outhouse, and a 'proper' toilet on the first floor at the back of the house, which made Hinterschmidrüti history the very first time it was used. When Popi, Billy's ex-wife, tried to sit on it against his warnings, the toilet bowl burst, much to the horror of the user. Needless to say, a new toilet was quickly procured, which Billy then fitted at 11.30 at night and installed everything himself. The electrical 'installations' in the house and in the shed were just as disastrous as the outdoor supply line, which was attached to the wall outside a living room window on the second floor, with the risk of touching the wires if something was to be lifted out of the window. So the house wiring was ordered to be removed and sunk into the ground and an electrical box installed on the east side of the house, while Billy removed various old electrical wires in the house that were still 'insulated' with thin rubber and cloth wrapping.

He removed these cables throughout the house, replaced a large part of them with cable conduits and new wires himself, and also carried out various electrical installations, which were then inspected by the EKZ and found to be in order. He then also had to remove the overhead line to the shed, lay the sewer pipes and pull in the electrical cables. The remaining electrical work with new fuse systems and energy meters was then carried out by the electrical company Müller from Rämismühle. It should also be mentioned that - because Billy had removed the overhead line, which was also mounted next to a window near the coach house in a life-threatening position - the electrical supply line had to be routed from the main house to the coach house. This meant that a trench around 35 meters long and 60 centimeters deep had to be dug from the electrical switch box in the main house to the coach house.

So pick and shovel were taken, by all the women and Billy present, and then this hard work was also done over a number of hours, after which the sewer pipes were laid and the electrical cables pulled in, which the Müller electrical company then protected in the coach house with a separate fuse box.

During the first few years, we only had one washing facility, namely a small cold water tap in the kitchen, under which there was a 'pouring stone' or a sink or a small yellow stone washing-up trough. A bathroom was out of the question for the time being, and so over time the most popular FIGU members were those who lived near the center and could provide a bathroom. If such members were not available, we had no choice but to disappear with a kettle full of hot water in the toilet or in our own room - if available. For the very tough among us, our open-air bath, the fountain, was of course available in summer and winter, which Billy built on the west side with the help of Jacobus in February 1977 had bricked up half of the house. As the water flowing into the well came from a spring, it was very cold even in the warm season. In winter, thick ice often had to be picked up first before the need for cleanliness could be met.

Around the house - as already mentioned - it looked no better than inside, on the contrary: every time it rained, the ground was soaked right up to the house wall and was one big quagmire, so that anyone who took a few steps outside carried thick clods of dirt into the house. For this reason, a narrow strip was quickly concreted under the protruding roof along the side of the house so that people could at least change rooms with reasonably clean shoes without spreading the dirt everywhere.

On April 7, 1977, Billy and his family were able to move in, accompanied by Jacobus, who also pitched his tent in Hinterschmidrüti on the same day. At first, however, it was only temporary, as he slept in an ancient metal bunk bed, on the top of which he had spread out and piled up his belongings.

After moving in, things really got going. The drudgery at Hinterschmidrüti became a permanent job, and by permanent job we mean that the hardest work was done between 18 and 22 hours a day, often even 24 hours. As most of our members at the time were working away from home, most of the joint work was done in the evening and at night, while Billy and Jacobus didn't stay idle during the day, of course, because Billy, as an all-rounder, also carried out various plumbing, carpentry and joinery jobs, as well as planting a garden and cutting down various trees with Jacobus using a two-hand push-pull forestry saw. Of course, the stumps also had to be removed from the ground, which Billy, as a trained miner, accomplished by 'undermining' the whole thing with explosives and blasting it out.

It was a point of honor that all of the out-of-town members got into their cars right after closing time and drove to the center to continue working there for hours. They only finished work at night and drove home, dead tired, to get some more sleep. In hindsight, it's a miracle that there was never an accident due to fatigue. By the light of a large lamp, they dug, poured concrete, laid bricks and carpentered for all they were worth. Although the employees generally had no idea about the individual jobs and were not familiar with all the work according to their professions and daily activities, everything still went smoothly because Billy was the one who understood and mastered all the work and was therefore able to give the necessary instructions and guide the employees so that everything was accomplished. Work often went on almost non-stop from Friday evening to Sunday night, as many things had to be set up within a few months. As a result, all our members had to learn to withstand constant pressure. They learned to cope with fatigue and overexertion and to overcome them, each within the scope of their own physical, mental or material abilities.

And so it came to pass that the drudgery on our farm bore other fruits than we had expected, because it was precisely the drudgery that initially divided the 'spirits' - the strong stayed, and the weak, unwilling and incapable jumped off like fleas from a dead dog. First of all, in April 1977, the former laundry room, which also served as a slaughterhouse, rumble chamber and shooting range for the hunters and gamekeepers, was converted into an office for Billy.

I can still remember him standing in the adjoining stable, kicking the wall with one foot and saying to the Marchetti bricklayers, two brothers and work colleagues of my foster father, who we had hired to carry out further work: "This wall has to be broken out and rebuilt." Even as he spoke, there was a crash and the wall he had kicked collapsed with a roar. Once the floor had been filled in and concreted, the walls were paneled, and it was during this work that the first of many accidents occurred in Hinterschmidrütli. Marcel Hirt, an accountant by profession, who was part of our group at the time, was building the new office together with Billy and tripped over a brick, fell and broke two ribs. However, his accident was not the only incident worth mentioning in connection with the conversion of the laundry room into Billy's office. In previous years, the hunters and gamekeepers had become accustomed to shooting game from the laundry room and other areas of our newly acquired farm, and they were less than pleased with the new residents who ruthlessly spoiled their ambush.

Shortly after moving in, the first loud arguments with the hunters broke out. The mutual shouting match only ended when Billy shouted: "I'll put a bullet in the butt of the first hunter who lies in wait in our yard." The hunters were wide-eyed and ran away, only to be accompanied by the police the next day. Under the walnut tree behind our house, the lament went on loudly all over again. The hunters tried to defend what they considered to be their customary rights and, of course, Billy didn't let them talk to him at all.

This row was the beginning of a feud that lasted for years, during which the hunters gave us a hard time. Although they now obviously had respect for Billy, because they no longer dared to simply do what they wanted, peace was still a long way off. The offer of peace from the hunters then came quite unexpectedly in the form of a roe deer, which was presented to Billy by Mr. Franzi, the gamekeeper. In 1980, on a beautiful late summer evening, after Billy and Jacobus had processed eighteen cubic meters of concrete between 8.00 in the morning and 16.30 in the afternoon, the gamekeeper suddenly stood on the house square with his gift, and from then on, with a few exceptions, there was peace.

Even before Billy's office was completely finished, we had already started to clear and level the swamp that lay between the house and the shed. Because the piece of land was completely spoiled by toxic waste that our predecessor had spilled on it, Billy had decided to create a parking lot for our cars. So we diligently picked and shoveled to excavate, replace and level the ground. Load after load of gravel was unloaded and spread over the new parking lot. In addition, we placed straps on the side of the slope to close off the parking lot, and in some places we even had to concrete the surface of the future parking lot. The edges were planted at the end and we happily awaited the things that were to grow there. Should - because every plant died in the first two years. The soil was so poisoned that nothing could grow at first. Only after two years, a lot of effort and two trailer loads of new humus did it recover enough for the first plants to thrive.

While some were still toiling away in the parking lot, others were busy preparing the shed, because back in Hinwil, when the last 'Wassermann' was published before the move, Billy had set the date for the first meeting and the first lecture in Hinterschmidrüti for June 19, 1977. After the Schutzbach brothers and I had cleared away a huge pile of bark, the floor of the future hall was ripped out so that the load-bearing beams could be partially replaced and Billy, with the help of a few others, could install the stairs.

Under high pressure

So we worked on the hall in the coach house so that it was ready on time. The last five days before the meeting were spent working around the clock. While the men knocked the paneling onto the walls, Renato Ventura tore out the construction clamp of a main connection in the east corner of the hall so that he could work more comfortably. This idea soon proved to be ill-advised, as the stability of the entire building depended on this one construction clamp. After the paneling was completely installed, the walls had to be painted and the floor painted at the last minute. Three hours before the start of the event, the chairs could be set up for the expected guests, and not too early, as the first people arrived while the last chairs were still being put in place.

On the afternoon of June 19, 1977, as the visitors entered the hall and took their seats, Billy noticed that the Remise was beginning to shake alarmingly under the weight of around 75 people. To prevent a panic that could have led to the worst, he waved Jacobus over and left the hall with him. The two of them quickly fetched large beams and used them to shore up the building in order to give the coach house, and therefore the hall, the necessary stability for the duration of the lecture. Only after the imminent danger had been averted did they reappear and the announced meeting could take its course. Billy, who had previously worked through a full five days and nights without even a minute's sleep, now also gave a talk from 2.00-5.00 p.m., which all those present listened to and followed with fascination. Then the questions and discussions began, which lasted until after midnight, after which the last visitors left the center at 00:30.

After the meeting, the most urgent concrete work on the central post on the valley side of the shed was carried out that same night, of course again under Billy's direction and with his help, to give the hall and the shed the necessary stability for the future. During all this time, Billy didn't sleep a wink and didn't allow himself a minute's rest, which was of course often the case later on. From the very beginning, Billy was the driving force behind the whole company, and he was able to motivate all the members and get them in line.

As soon as the hall was finished and the shed was secured, the men began to dig the excavation pit for our future meditation center at its northern corner. Here, too, they worked through more than one night, as we didn't have any machines for excavation at that time, so our men had to do all the work by hand. They had to excavate almost three meters of rock-hard clay soil, which was particularly hard work.

As soon as the hole had been dug and the wall on the mountain side had been concreted in place, the entire wall collapsed one rainy night shortly after the work had been completed. However, it was not only the heavy rain that was to blame for this collapse, but above all the Giza influences were the reason or trigger for it, as they drove the wall down.

They were still up to mischief and tried to harm us wherever they could. Our men then spent an entire weekend working hard to dig out the hole for the lower room of the meditation center. Despite heavy rain, they completed the planned work and finally called it a day early on Sunday evening. Tired, they were sitting around the kitchen table when someone suddenly raised the alarm. Mountain pressure and rain had triggered a dangerous landslide in the hole they had dug, and now they had to act as quickly as possible, because every minute that passed increased the danger considerably.

So it was a case of: "All hands behind the shovels and pickaxes" and: "Who else can be reached?" Renato Ventura, who had just returned to his home in Fällanden from Hinterschmidrüti, and Engelbert Wächter, who had just entered his apartment in Horgen after spending the weekend with his family at relatives in Germany when the phone started ringing, could be reached. Both responded immediately to the emergency call from the center and arrived at their workplace as quickly as they could. Together with Herbert Runkel and Guido Moosbrugger, who were spending their vacations at the center, as well as Hans and Konrad Schutzbach, who had stayed after their weekend assignment in the hope of a quiet chat, the men who had been called together began to repair the existing damage and prevent even greater damage. They worked almost as hard as Billy and Jacobus, who were most used to such jobs.

They all put in another full day's work and on the night from Sunday to Monday they dug out the earth that had slipped away and, following Billy's instructions, began to form and concrete the wall on the mountain side. Work went on until the early hours of the morning with great effort and haste to get everything done.

After a week, the formwork was removed from the mountain-side wall. Because this wall had to withstand the mountain pressure the most, it was also built to be particularly solid. It measured around 2 meters in height and was more than 5 meters long and had a thickness of 1.6 meters, so it was almost as thick as it was high!

In the morning, after the formwork had been removed, Jacobus was dismayed to find the wall at the bottom of the hole in the ground. It was lying there as if it had been picked up and moved. He ran and got Billy out of bed to show him the nasty mess. But what else could they do but get back to the preparatory work as quickly as possible to minimize the damage and the delay?

By the following night, everything was ready again so that this time all four walls could be concreted. This was despite the fact that the entire formwork had to be redone and reinforced with railroad tracks. Just like the week before, all the men worked together to achieve the goal. This time, however, Guido's son Christian and Mitcho Ivanchevich also helped out. It was not until September 4, 1977, at the 180th contact, that Quetzal explained that the collapse of the wall on the night of August 29-30 had been the work of the Giza intelligences, who were doing everything they could to damage the joint work and prevent Billy's mission. Whichever way the wall had been brought down by the Giza intelligences, it didn't change the fact that it had to be at least partially removed.

So Billy and Jacobus took turns removing the concrete with the electric kango hammer they had borrowed. They removed about 70-80 cm of concrete, which they then immediately reused for the ground level. Once they had finished, they immediately concreted the floor of the lower room. When this was finally finished, with a delay but at least without any further mishaps, the ceiling was immediately shuttered and, having learned from bad experiences, reinforced with railroad tracks - which Hans Benz had organized at the Sulzer company in Winterthur, where he was foreman - and then concreted.

Engelbert was already working on the wooden construction for the pyramid while the final work on the lower room of the centrum was still underway. With the active help of his wife Maria and children Conny and Rolf, the individual parts for the pyramid were made in the Wächter family's apartment in Horgen. A scaffold was erected in the large children's room, which was used to make intermediate assemblies to check the accuracy, as it was an important condition that the pyramid's dimensions were exactly right.

The individual parts prefabricated in Horgen were transported to the center and assembled on the floor above them. The two side sections were then assembled on site. The final combination of the last two sections was then carried out on site. Now the whole pyramid had to be made 'vibration-proof' according to Quetzal's instructions, for which huge copper plates were needed, which Jacobus collected from Wetzikon with a tractor and trailer. In order to be able to transport the plates, they were placed upright in the trailer and secured.

Once at the center, the plates for the outer shell of the meditation pyramid were assembled and connected. Once the meditation pyramid had been completed, the walls of the upper room of the pyramid were bricked up, thus completing the actual meditation center. The final balance showed that around 50 m³ of concrete gravel had been used for the construction of the center, of which around 9 m³ was used for the mountain-side wall of the lower room alone.

The interior work on the meditation center now began in a hurry. Billy himself pulled in the electrical cables and installed the electronic security systems for the pyramid. Before the interior work began, Billy and Jacobus painted the walls of the center together, laughing and singing. Once everything was in place, painted, set up and organized, the individual meditations could begin exactly as planned. Of course, as usual, it had taken some harsh and sometimes loud words from Billy to get the slow-witted to switch gears and the tardy workers to swing their shovels and picks faster, but now that everything was ready, it was the success of everyone - the success of a joint and collaborative effort.

Work on the meditation center had been going on for almost three months and it was already the end of October. It was high time to cut down the trees in the planned garden adjoining the shed before winter set in. Billy and Jacobus had also noticed that below the coach house, towards Tobel, some large old pear trees were completely rotten and had become a danger to people and animals. So Jacobus and Billy worked together to cut down the first trees in the center area, whose wood was to be used for heating in winter. But this year, the first snow fell unusually early and stayed right away. The first winter in Hinterschmidrütli was one of the snowiest we have ever experienced, which meant that most of the trees felled in late fall remained lying around throughout the winter and could only be processed the following spring, which caused us no small amount of heating problems.

This is where I will end my stories for the time being, which only cover around six months from the early days of the center. But one thing should have become clear from it, namely that Billy and the members of the FIGU were given nothing - neither by the Plejaren nor by any patrons. Not only in terms of work and commitment were all the participants stretched to the limit, but also financially. At that time, Billy and the FIGU did not receive any financial donations, grants or patronage contributions from anyone, but everything was paid for out of their own pockets by everyone involved. When larger purchases had to be made, their necessity was discussed at the group meetings and then everyone gave as much as they could. Just as it was done at the first joint coffee in the Freihof, it remained the same afterwards, and it is still the same today, even if the financial pressure has eased in the meantime and the FIGU can afford things that could only be dreamed of in the past. Today, thanks to our joint efforts, the association is on a sound financial footing and, thanks to Billy's clever financial management, there is nothing to worry about in the future.

Billy always bore the brunt, not only in terms of work and planning, but also financially. The money that he had earned in his adventurous years in the Middle and Far East by bringing back kidnapped people was frozen there for many years, and it was only when the Hinterschmidrütli had long since been bought and was at an advanced stage of development that the money he had earned was gradually handed over to him personally, although it should be noted that the money promised to him was actually paid to him by his clients down to the last penny.

He also invested this entire, not exactly small sum in the construction and expansion of the center as a matter of course, so that it can be justifiably said that he not only made the largest financial contribution of all, but also that he and his team made the biggest contribution of all the family actually lived on his meagre disability pension of CHF 800 in the early Hinterschmidrütli years - although this has since doubled - as well as a few quiet contributions from core group members or friends. The contributions of the core group members were regulated early on and kept within a framework that allowed everyone to lead a normal life and not be overburdened financially, but also that the debts incurred by raising the money for the purchase could be repaid to the creditors interest-free within 10 years.

So when the ignorant, the disinformed, antagonists and opponents or even so-called cult representatives claim again and again that Billy is a guru or cult leader, who has taken out his members in order to build up and expand Hinterschmidrütli to its present state, then this is just as much a malicious lie and an insidious slander as the stupid assertion that the Center and its construction are supported and promoted in a mysterious way or that Billy and the Plejaren and his cult leaders are a guru or cult leader, infamous lie and an insidious, vile slander, as is the stupid assertion that the center and its construction were mysteriously supported and promoted by the Plejaren or given to Billy and the FIGU by unknown benefactors, which is why little or no personal contribution had to be made.

We can say with great satisfaction that Billy and the FIGU were not given anything - neither in terms of work nor financially - because everything was built up and expanded by our own efforts and with our own money and brought to its current prosperity, to which the former core group members also contributed a great deal, who, for some private, domineering or other reasons, were not able to contribute have left the FIGU for unfathomable reasons.

And also thanks to a passive member who pushed through a proposal at a passive general meeting for a 7% annual contribution of one month's salary - over and above the 30-franc contribution of the officially required annual membership fee, all passive members have made a not insignificant contribution with their dues and their work - and they continue to do so, for which Billy would like to express his special thanks to all passive members, patrons and FIGU friends, and of course all core group members are very grateful for everything.

THREADS OF PEACE & The Get Peace Right Now Initiative

We at FIGU USA are participating in the 2026 Threads of Peace by creating a True Peace Symbol Quilt, approximately 10x10 feet. We are asking any interested creative artist in the FIGU COMMUNITY to submit your art work, to fit a 12x12 inch space with depictions of the True Peace Symbol. A third party will stitch all the designs together for a small fee, to be determined. Strive to include the web site getpeacerrightnow.com if it fits in your design.

The "Threads of Peace 2026" event is scheduled to take place on Sunday, May 24, 2026, from 1:00 PM to 2:00 PM in Washington, D.C., at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave NW. The event will feature models parading the streets wearing garments crafted from the Global Peace Flags, symbolizing unity, sustainability, and hope. The event will also include a lineup of speakers discussing the intersection of fashion and peace. The event is organized by the Global Peace Flag and is set to be an offline gathering.

Capitalism and Overpopulation by Dave Harmon

For quite some time, Capitalism and Overpopulation have been dual forces driving the ecological destruction of the planet. These twin forces, acting together and our interactions with them, have put our planet on a path toward eventual uninhabitability.

Capitalism, through its dependency on continuous growth, and the attendant environmental consequences, and Overpopulation for its role in that growth and those consequences.

Before going any further, let's define capitalism. Generative AI defines it as: "an economic and political system in which a country's trade and industry are controlled by private owners for profit." Karl Marx defined it as "capitalism is an economic system characterized by private ownership of the means of production and wage-based labor. It involves the accumulation of capital, where individuals invest capital to make a profit and then reinvest it, leading to a continuous cycle of accumulation." And possibly the most accurate, by John Maynard Keynes,

"the astounding belief that the most wickedest of men will do the most wickedest of things for the greatest good of everyone".

Economic anthropologist, Jason Hickel, author of How Degrowth Will Save the World, describes capitalism's workings as follows; (1) "People often assume that capitalism is defined by "markets and trade". But markets and trade existed for thousands of years before capitalism. Capitalism is only 500 years old. [In sum] the tendency to equate capitalism with "markets and trade" naturalizes a system that is not natural, and prevents us from having a clear-eyed view of how it operates and how we might want to do things differently." Why isn't capitalism natural?

For capitalism to exist and thrive, it relies on constant, continuous growth, forever! Nothing in-nature operates in this way, and common sense tells us that economies, which rely on the continual extraction of finite natural resources, cannot either.

Dr. Hickel continues; "Orthodox economists insist that all we need is yet more growth. More progressive types tell us that we need to shift some of the yields of growth from the richer segments of the population to the poorer ones, evening things out a bit. Neither approach is adequate. Why? Because even at current levels of average global consumption, we're overshooting our planet's bio-capacity by more than 50% each year. In other words, growth isn't an option anymore — we've already grown too much. Scientists are now telling us that we're blowing past planetary boundaries at breakneck speed. And the hard truth is that this global crisis is due almost entirely to overconsumption in rich countries”.

On top of this overconsumption, the UN World Food Programme reports that 9 million people die from hunger every year. That is equivalent to the population of New York City, dying every year. In addition, the World Bank Group, Poverty, Prosperity, and Planet Report, 2024 (4) states that 44% of the global population lives below the poverty threshold of $6.85 a day (dollar values adjusted per country). The World Bank puts people living on less than $10 per day at 56.3% of the global population. Many believe that these are only distributional challenges, that will one day be solved. That may be the case, however, this does not change the fact, that as cited in the article above, we are already surpassing planetary environmental boundaries at breakneck speed. Reducing our human “footprint” on the planet, with all the destructive consequences that have accompanied it, will mean managing our resource extraction and use, much differently than we have so far. It will also mean thoughtful, intelligent management of the global population. We could perhaps think about this more rationally if not for the racist, eugenics past associated with any form of population control.

According to J Van Bavel (The Centre for Sociological Research / Family & Population Studies (FaPOS), Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Leuven, Parkstraat 45 bus 3601, 3000 Leuven, Belgium), in 1798, Thomas Malthus's essay, “Essay on the Principle of Population,” was the first time the idea of overpopulation leading to widespread famine, and other social issues, was put forth. Between 1750 and 1950 Europe and America experienced a population boom. From 1950 on, much more substantial population growth occurred in Latin America, Asia, and Africa. By the beginning of the 19th century, earth was home to over 1 billion people, for the first time. By 1920, it was over 2 billion and by 1960, another 1 billion people had been added - this, in 40 years rather than 120 years. And it continued to go even faster: 4 billion by 1974, 5 billion by 1987, 6 billion by 1999, 7 billion in 2011”, 8.2 billion in 2025.

Even in light of this growth, it is worthwhile to note that according to the United Nations World Fertility Report 2024, (2) birth rates are on the decline and are expected to be at 1.8 births per woman by 2100. It is lower than that now in some countries, while still well above the replacement rate in others. However, globally, it appears that we are in fact, moving toward a state of declining rates of population growth. Incredibly, some see this as an existential threat.

Elon Musk has said (3)“ I think for most countries, they should view the birthrate as the single biggest problem they need to solve.” Really? These concerns are based on theoretical, projected effects i.e; labor shortages, economic consequences of reduced consumption (fewer consumers), and hence a reduced economic activity and reduced corporate profits. And, oh yes, having enough younger workers to provide proper care and support for seniors; something that has certainly received the highest priority thus far...

Lost in most conversations about overpopulation, is the fact that despite an overall slowdown in the rate of population growth the real number of people on this planet, and the attendant environmental consequences, continues to grow.

Dr. Alon Tal, a visiting professor at Stanford University and a faculty member at Tel Aviv University's Department of Public Policy, published an article in April of 2025 entitled: Overpopulation: A New Survey Confirms the Cause of the Planet's Environmental Crises(14). In it, he summarizes his findings from a much more comprehensive article he authored,

The Environmental Impacts of Overpopulation, for the peer-reviewed academic journal Encyclopedia. In it he lists six of the most consequential environmental impacts of overpopulation:

1. Deforestation: Trees Fall as Populations Rise - Between 2001 and 2023, Brazil lost nearly 69 million hectares of forest, while Indonesia lost over 30 million. Most of this destruction wasn't for lumber exports or furniture—it was simply to make room for 34 million and 59 million more people respectively.

2. Climate Change: More People, More Carbon Emissions - Every person is born with a carbon footprint. That means more people equals more greenhouse gas emissions. Even in countries with low per capita emissions, the cumulative impact of rising populations is massive.

3. Biodiversity Loss: More People – Less Nature - The World Wildlife Fund's 2024 Living Planet Report reported a 73% decline in the earth's monitored vertebrate populations between 1970 and 2020. The magnitude of such damage is hard to imagine. While habitat fragmentation, overhunting, and pollution are often cited as culprits, each of these pathologies ultimately is associated with population growth.

4. Overfishing: Oceans Can No Longer Keep Up - The global appetite for fish has skyrocketed, with demand expected to double again by mid-century. Once-abundant fish stocks are now dangerously depleted: The UN reported in 2024 that the percentage of stocks fished at unsustainable levels nearly quadrupled globally during the past three decades. Yes, technology makes fishing more efficient. But the drop is largely because more people want more seafood.

5. Water Scarcity: Shrinking aquifers and thirsty cities - Global domestic water demand has increased six-fold since 1970.

Much of this is driven by population growth. Jordan offers a sobering example. With a population that increased twenty-fold since 1948, this dry land country is among the world's most water-scarce. Urban households receive water only once a week, and farmers routinely tap illegal pipelines just to keep crops alive.

6. Desertification: Population Growth Drives Soil Degradation - As population grows, so too does the livestock needed to feed it. Overgrazing has become a global scourge. Meanwhile, marginal lands are increasingly converted for cultivation by subsistence farmers desperate to feed growing families, leading to erosion and nutrient depletion.

The UN estimates that over one-third of Earth's topsoil is already degraded. As food demand is projected to rise by 50% by 2050,

the situation will almost certainly worsen. Traditional practices like fallowing (letting land rest) are no longer feasible when families constantly face food shortages.

Any serious consideration of the multiple ecological crises we are now facing, must recognize they are ALL made far more difficult by larger populations. This is simple math. In the early 20th century, scientists were projecting mass starvation due to an inability to produce enough food to meet rising global needs. In 1908-1909, the Haber-Bosch process was discovered for synthesizing ammonia from atmospheric nitrogen. As a key ingredient in fertilizer, this process thereby ameliorated the problems of a shortage of nitrogen from traditional sources, and was, successful in mitigating the mass starvation that was projected by many scientists at the time.

Unfortunately, there is not another Haber-Bosch level discovery currently on the horizon. Crop yields are now dropping in many parts of the world today and many scientists are projecting increased hunger and food-insecurity globally in the next 5-10 years. In his book,

“The Path To A Livable Future”, Stan Cox has offered a detailed analysis of many actions that can be taken to move from our current unsustainable path, toward a sustainable one. None are possible without significant changes and sacrifices by some, to insure fairness to all.

Research shows that worldwide, giving women equal rights, access to education, and access to birth control and family planning information, lowers birth rates dramatically. These steps are positive and necessary however, at the current level of overpopulation and over extraction of resources, they are not enough. Planet earth and humankind will not survive in their current forms without intelligent, rationally crafted policies that deal directly with the numbers of new births that take place on our planet and the resulting resource use.

Organizations such as The Overpopulation Project, have looked at this issue in detail and propose a wide range of solutions that address the differing needs that exist from country to country, around the world.

<https://overpopulation-project.com/?s=Policies+to+promote++a+decrease+in+global+populations>.

The connection between more people and more resource use is obvious. Perhaps less obvious is the level of impact that Capitalism plays in resource use.

Felix Fuders, in his book, Fulfilling The UN Sustainability Goals, argues convincingly that regardless of where one stands on Overpopulation, Capitalism, in and of itself, due to its reliance on continuous growth, and the effects of interest, renders the UN Sustainability Goals, mathematically impossible to achieve. Rich countries that have already achieved high levels of per capita wealth, still pursue growth, in spite of the obvious social, environmental and unethical abuses that occur. Yet somehow, we maintain the cognitive dissonance of believing that a system that has incentivized and rewarded so much bad behavior and produced so many negative outcomes, both social and environmental, is the best one available and should continue, with no significant changes! It's true that elements of the current capitalist system have been responsible for many achievements, technological and otherwise, and have raised living standards in many parts of the world.

Nevertheless, this does not change the fact that a system dependent on continuous, infinite growth, is not sustainable on a finite planet.

A little known writer in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, named Silvio Gesell had a different definition of Capitalism than those cited at the beginning of this essay: He defines it as: “An economic condition in which the demand for loan money and real capital exceeds the supply and therefore gives rise to interest.” From this followed three remarkable insights about the capitalist system of his day (and the one we currently still follow) that are perhaps even more prescient today than they were 100 years ago; (1st) money should serve only as a medium of exchange and not as a store of value, (2nd) the existence of interest is a wholly unnatural phenomenon, not found in nature and should be eliminated, (3rd) land should not be treated as private property; no private entity created it and hence should have no claim of ownership. Gesell was first and foremost a supporter of a Free-Market system and viewed Capitalism as a pathological variant of the Free-Market system. Josh Sidman, of the Silvio Gesell Foundation states, “According to Gesell, the reasons why capitalism as we know it does not create a “rising tide that lifts all boats”, as described in free-market theory, is two-fold. Privately owned land (1) and our irrational form of money (2) are both violations of the fundamental principles of the free-market system.”

(1st) Money - In addition to money being created by the Federal Reserve, private banks also create money when they make loans, in effect out of “thin air”. They are loaning money into the economy that did not exist prior to the issuance of the loan. If for example a bank makes a loan for $100,000, that is $100,000 of “new” money. The repayment of that loan however, will require significantly more than $100,000, depending on the rate of interest and the time frame over which the loan will be repaid. Where will this additional money come from? Quoting Josh Sidman again, “In order to allow those existing loans to be paid and avoid economic crisis caused by defaulting on loans, more money must be created through additional lending, ad infinitum. It's like the proverbial shark that must continue swimming or die”.

Gesell's first insight regarding money was that it should not be a store of value. This property of money runs completely counter to its other, primary function, as a medium of exchange. Due to it also being a store of value, it is often withheld from circulation and used as a vehicle for saving. Goods / products on the other hand, lose value over time - the longer they are held, the more value they lose. Money is untouched by these concerns. Holders of money don't worry about a loss in purchasing power if they delay lending or spending their money. This gives holders of money an unfair advantage over producers of goods and services.

Our current form of money also restricts Capital Formation (machines, equipment, etc.), because interest allows money to increase in value without taking the risks involved in investing. By keeping money on the sidelines, interest limits what is available for businesses to borrow, invest and grow. How did Gesell envision incentivizing the constant circulation of money, v.s. the instinct to save or hoard it? His solution was demurrage currency. Demurrage is a term that comes from the shipping industry which refers to a charge incurred by ships taking longer than their allotted time to unload and clear the docks for the next vessel. Gesell proposed a demurrage currency that would lose value at a rate of .01% per week (.52% per year). This small loss in value would be quite insignificant for the average family that spends the majority of their income on the necessities of life.

Nevertheless, the question then arises, what about savings for a rainy day, or retirement, or college for our kids? Gesell states: "I... propose a complete separation of the medium of exchange from the medium of saving. All the commodities of the world are at the disposal of those who wish to save, so why should they make their savings in the form of money? Money was not made to be saved." Josh Sidman adds: "There is an endless array of options available to those who wish to store wealth -- stocks, commodities, other physical assets, etc. One can also lend money as a way of avoiding demurrage and thereby preserving its value. The only instrument that should not be used as a vehicle for saving is the generally accepted, legal tender medium of exchange." I would add that in such a system, banks and financial / investment institutions would no doubt step in and fill the growing demand for investment advice. Which brings us to Gesell's second insight.

(2nd) Interest - A full understanding of the effects of interest, especially compound interest, reveals that compound interest is a prime factor in the failure of our economic system to ever sufficiently meet the well-being needs of modern societies. Compound interest has a continuously doubling effect that does not occur in the natural world. Josh Sidman, of the Silvio Gesell Foundation (<https://silviogesell.com>), gives the following example: "One penny invested in the year 0, at 1% interest, compounded monthly, would be worth 4.8 million dollars in the year 2000 - enough to buy a nice apartment in New York City. One penny invested at 2% interest for that same time frame would be worth 2.4 quadrillion dollars — enough to buy everything on earth five times. That is the power of compound interest".

At one point, the charging of interest was condemned by Judaism, Christianity, Islam, and Aristotle. And this was not simply a repudiation of excessively high interest rates, this condemnation referred to any interest. At one point, Christianity regarded the charging of interest as a mortal sin, placing it on a par with murder. Quoting Josh Sidman again, "Any concept that is condemned by Judaism, Christianity, Islam, and Aristotle, I would argue, deserves our careful consideration".

By the implementation of demurrage currency, holders of money / banks, etc., would be incentivized to lend as much money as possible, as often as possible, to avoid the demurrage charges. Josh Sidman observes, "In fact, in such a system it might even be the case that investments which generate negative returns could be judged attractive, as long as those negative returns are smaller than the rate of demurrage. For example, if the only options available are to lose 5.2% to demurrage or to make a capital investment that will generate a negative 2% return, the latter will be preferable." By contrast, keeping money in a bank, where it can earn interest, without participating in the real economy, means money to borrow, for capital expenditures, is always scarce. Quoting Josh Sidman again, "This scarcity is actually what defines "capitalism", and the elimination of that scarcity, would lead to a "free-market" system that is not capitalistic."

In short, there would no longer be "money that makes money", simply by existing, with no relationship to any product or service being provided i.e; (unearned income). Any serious effort at a system in which the goal is a "rising tide that lifts all boats", leaves no room for unearned income.

Josh Sidman states: "This process [lending to avoid demurrage] would continue until excess returns of capital disappeared and the returns on capital would then be just sufficient to cover the expenses of maintaining and operating capital.” This could be accomplished by a gradual lowering of interest rates on savings and borrowing. During this process, savers and borrowers (both personal in institutional) would gradually reallocate / realign themselves to reflect their needs / preferences, risk tolerance, etc. With a demurrage currency, some investors would undoubtedly exit the lending market, in favor of stocks, bonds, and other physical assets.

However, others would still choose to participate despite demurrage, confident in their abilities to “spot a winner” and reap higher returns. At that point, the expenses of “maintaining and operating capital” are simply the operating costs, along with depreciation and a reasonable profit, for the lending institution. Interest, (the margin beyond those expenses), would be eliminated.

This concept sounds foreign, to our capitalistic, interest-earning, ears. However, it's worth noting that many investors already take advantage of the wide variety of means other than interest, to grow and store their wealth.

(3rd) Land - Land is a PUBLIC good, whose value and benefits belong to ALL people. No person created land and therefore no person has a legitimate claim to it. This does not mean there should cease to be private property, on the contrary. However, in a nutshell, it means if you made it, you own it. No one can make such a claim on land itself or its resources. However, structures and improvements made ON land should be the property of those who performed or paid for the work.

Silvio Gesell's concept of "Free Land" proposed nationalization of land and its distribution through a leasehold system. Today, many governments own public lands that are used for national parks. Land is also leased by governments for forestry, mining and agriculture. Similar lease agreements could be created for all remaining lands. They could be structured to prioritize social and environmental benefits, rather than solely generating revenue for their owners. This would move us towards Gesell's vision of optimal land access and use, based on the needs of societies.

Henry George was another writer from the 19th century whose views on public ownership of land v.s. private property, predated Silvio Gesell's and in fact, Gesell built on those in the formation of his own concepts. Their ideas differed in some important respects however, the soundness and viability of the concept enjoyed significant acceptance at the time. A full exploration of Silvio Gesell's land and money reforms is beyond the scope of this piece however, a detailed explanation can be found in his book titled “Establishing a Natural Economic Order Through Free-Land and Free-Money”, as well as at <https://silviogesell.com>.

It should be clarified here, that the planetary damages that we are now experiencing, as a result of relentless growth for the past 100+ years were not present in Silvio Gesell's day.

The revelations regarding mankind's impacts on the natural world were yet to be discovered.

However, the implementation of Gesell's insights regarding money, interest and land, can now be powerful tools in creating a functioning economy that does not rely on, nor is driven by continuous growth. This is the key insight that must be implemented, in conjunction with intelligent management of the population, if we are to correct the destructive path we are on.

Surely 500 years of boom and bust cycles, euphemistically called the “business cycle”, along with the growing wealth disparity and income inequality, millions of people dying every year from hunger and disease, untold loss of biodiversity and the overheating of our planet, with all the attendant consequences - massive climate-related migrations, resource shortages, leading to wars, overcrowding, etc. - are evidence enough that something must change. We are at a point that requires a major paradigm shift. You’ve heard it before but it bears repeating here; the first step to getting out of a hole is to stop digging.

The insights of Alon Tal, Silvio Gesell, Henry George, Jason Hickel, Stan Cox, Felix Fuders and many others, have identified the damaging consequences of overpopulation, and continuous GDP growth driven by the mathematical power of interest. They have given us the foundational steps to free ourselves. These insights are the starting point for corrective action.

Ignoring these insights and trying only to invent our way out of this, is the wrong approach. It’s like the man who dropped his keys one night at the east end of a parking lot but is looking at the west end because that’s where the light is. Many of the ideas in this essay have been tried and proven over 100 years ago, or more; and they can help us again if we are not too arrogant to use them. It will not be without some sacrifice. Although perhaps a more accurate term would be changes. Is it really a “sacrifice” to stop doing things that are driving our planet and all life on it toward destruction?

Placing the importance of human and planetary well-being over profits generated by a flawed, unsustainable economic system, should not be a radical concept. It is in fact quite doable if we make the collective decision to do so. Many aspects of it have been done before. Now, at this time, someone must take the first step. Will it be the United States? Can it be us, acting in our own self-interest? In so doing, other countries, also acting in their own self-interest, might seek to emulate America; and thereby help us to live up to our own professed ideals and to be a truly inspiring example to the rest of the world. The choice is ours.

Press release Swiss Post

US customs regulations hamper the shipping of goods to the USA

From 26 August 2025, Swiss Post will temporarily be unable to accept any postal goods consignments to the USA. This is due to the US government's new customs regulations, which affect all postal companies worldwide.

Important alternatives remain in place: document and express consignments to the USA are still possible. Swiss Post is working on solutions to ensure goods consignments can be shipped again as soon as possible.

The key points at a glance

- From 26 August 2025, Swiss Post will temporarily be unable to accept any further postal goods consignments to the USA
- Documents and express items can still be sent
- This is due to new customs regulations introduced by the US government
- Swiss Post is in close contact with the Swiss authorities (DETEC, OFCOM, PostCom) and is working intensively on alternative solutions
- The customs regulations affect all postal companies worldwide
- Swiss Post is examining the possibility of enabling gift consignments between private individuals up to a goods value of USD 100

(around CHF 80) to be sent as soon as possible

Customs duty now applicable to all goods consignments

The US government has decided that the current exemption limit of USD 800 for goods imported into the USA will be removed as of 29 August 2025. Without this exemption limit, every goods consignment - no matter the size or value - must be declared and cleared with US customs. The USA is also introducing new customs clearance regulations. These differ greatly from the Universal Postal Union's previous regulations. Now, all goods to the USA must be shipped with customs duties already paid.

The new rules affect all postal companies worldwide and are being introduced at very short notice. Important issues surrounding liability and the implementation of the new rules are still unresolved. For this reason, Swiss Post, like other postal companies, is forced to stop accepting goods consignments to the USA for the time being. Swiss Post came to this decision in close consultation with the competent national authorities such as DETEC, OFCOM and the supervisory authority PostCom.

Document consignments are not affected - alternatives are available Letters (including official documents and certificates) and express items sent via URGENT Express International with FedEx Express Swiss Post GmbH are not affected by this decision to stop accepting goods consignments. Swiss Post is examining all options to ensure that this suspension can be lifted as soon as possible and that goods consignments can be sent to the USA via the postal channel. In particular, gift consignments between private individuals up to a goods value of USD 100 (around CHF 80) should be able to be shipped again as quickly as possible.

Swiss Post is also working intensively on other possibilities allowing the sending of goods consignments to the USA outside of the international postal channel.

Swiss Post is informing its customers about future developments here.

A Fading Paradise! May the Garden be Saved?

The Connection Between Climate Change and an Overpopulation as the Root Cause

by Marilyn (Deren Leben die Liebe Erhell(t)) Kopczyk

Whilst Climate Change and Overpopulation remain sensitive subject matters, it is imperative that every human being considers the root cause of the Climates Change, as well as the Societal and Economical effects and/or impacts of an ever-growing populace, and what hindrance such poses towards a sustainable future upon this beautiful blue planet (gifted to man, to be as home and guardian over).

Climate Change denotes the certainty that a Global Warming has been established, to which an abnormal ongoing increase in global average temperature remains the course, resulting in escalating health hindering temperatures, increased drought and desertification, unrestrainable wild fires and unpredictable damaging whether, to make mention but of a mere few, The term Overpopulation has brought about some controversy, as it ‘seemingly ’poses to be in conflict with humanities right to Be Fruitful and Multiply, as well as ‘appears ’to hinder the free-will of the human being to do what is befitting for a pleasant and comfortable existence, however, does this truly remain so?

Conveying the presence of an Overpopulation in truth has nothing to do with hindering the wishes of or suppressing man, but in reality serves to preserve man (and all life), by providing due ‘caution ’to humanity (bring warning), that an evident and/or factual danger has arisen from an imbalanced state of living (way of life), out-of-harmony with nature, whereby the population of the human beings has increased to an extent which exceeds the carrying capacity of the ecological setting.

Accordingly, humanity ought observably assess their surroundings regarding this truth, fathom the probability of its cause and in turn cognize the effect.

For if it were justly bestowed upon humanity to act as caregiver over fauna, flora and the entirety of lesser life (as protector), to preserve such in accordance with the Laws of Creation, how may then humanity reason 'unheeding' this responsibility, to simply proceed in ceaselessly taking much to fashion that way of life (at all costs and to no end) and not take due notice of such indifference?

Whenever the life of the human being remains in question or of threat, when Crimes Against Humanity (Genocide) persist, the hearts of many swell, however upon any other life remaining in grave danger or facing utter extinction, woefully a blind-eye is turned and hearts grow cold, in such that very little (to no efforts at all), are made to prevent such disasters.

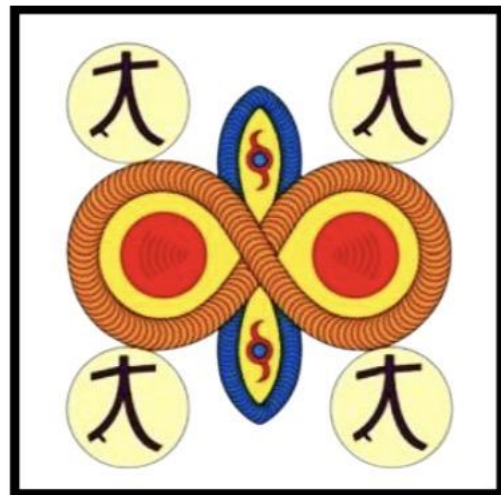

It has become increasingly so, that amid this fast-paced, high-consumer, technologically-advanced driven era, the average human being remains mostly in preoccupation of the own daily work-life balance, to which outward concernedness regarding the whole fades away, thus those whom do not concern themselves with such, remain unable to fathom how the everyday human being plays a contributing role toward the ever-growing climate crisis.

Fathoming such first and foremost requires that every human being heeds not only their responsibility for their individual well-being (caring for oneself), but likewise the responsibility to thy neighbor, fauna, flora, and the planet in its entirety (the collective). In such, heeding the earth as having been gifted to man as home, and in observing man as the highest in consciousness-created life upon earth, the greatest of responsibility ought be recognized with Man. As in the old adage "With great power comes great responsibility", to which this telling aphorism has been presented in various forms by countless philosophers, scholars and notable figures of times past, such as Cicero, Churchill, Voltaire, Homer, Ibn Umar and Immanuel, to which its understanding emphasized the recognition and obligation of individuals (the human being) to behave ethically (on behalf of the whole) and likewise to utilize ones knowledge for the benefit of the collective (rather than solely for ones self-gain), or to cause harm.

Thus let it be so, that by way of understanding the fundamental vital interconnectedness between an ever-growing populace and the increasing erratic change in climate, may one truly fathom the ways in which the human being encourages Crimes Against the Planetary (Ecocide). Amid this New Age

Symbol for Overpopulation
(Überbevölkerung)

(Golden Age) of Man, at long last have stronger efforts been set forth by environmental and scientific agencies to begin to fathom the true cause and effect of the evident escalating change in climate, to which organizations such as the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), World Wildlife Fund (WWF), Population Media Center (PMC) and Earth.org have openly advocated and determined the source of the climates change as having been Anthropogenic in nature.

Anthropogenic affirms the certitude of pollution and/or environmental change having explicitly originated from human activity, respectively ecological change caused and/or influenced by the populace (irrespective of being direct and/or indirect in nature).

Thus principally, an ever-growing population and/or overpopulation, only increases the demand for all forms of resources (i.e. natural, biological, economical, whether renewable, non-renewable, biotic, abiotic, etc.), which leads to resource strain and/or depletion.

Overpopulation results in higher emissions, resulting in greenhouse gases, environmental degradation and climate change; as well as socioeconomic strains such as unemployment, inequality and poverty, infrastructure strains resulting in public service overcrowding, housing inadequacy and increased public/social conflict, and correspondingly health strains which result in the spread of disease and disease mutation, and increased outbreaks, epidemics and pandemics, etc., to make mention of but a mere few.

If any of the aforesaid effects may be observed within the environment, then Overpopulation as the cause no longer remains mere speculation, but indeed has become reality and its truth! It is quite often spoken of resource and/or food scarcity, as well as increased natural disaster and equally of environmental decay, yet the origins to which these stem continue to remain un-understood by many, to which these have become so far-reaching that the aid of the masses is indeed necessitated to expend true profound efforts of value, to which control may be gained and broad success achieved.

Over the recent years much focus has surrounded the ban of plastic bags and straws, to which a broad halt had initially ensued, yet slowly became lax, with the ban remaining enforced by some, while becoming increasingly disregarded by others, as the convenience to the human being and profit-making remained of far greater importance, than the preservation of land, and faunal, floral, sea, and air life.

However, if such is ultimately destroyed, nothing remains extant upon the earth for the human enjoyment! Thus let the human being whom heeds their responsibility ponder, from wither else do the source of these plastics arise, which plastics remain of the most detriment and how may one mitigate use in the everyday life?

It remains so that micro-plastics are among those which produce the greatest of harm, to which such fibers are released into the environment via various means, by the thousand-millions per year

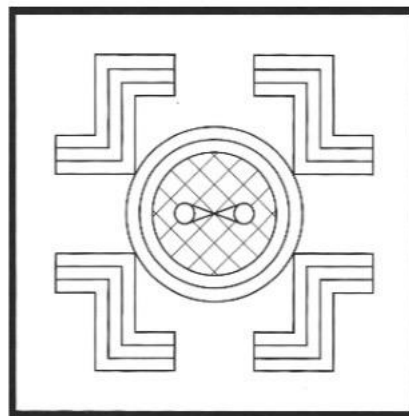

[1]. Primary sources for these plastics may be found amid the fashion and home goods industries via the production of garments and goods manufactured of micro-fiber material (i.e. polyester, nylon, acrylic, spandex, etc.) which are intended for short term use

[2]. Upon wash and dry these release micro-fibers both into the air via the air-vents and into the water streams via the plumbing, to which these intermix with external air and waters, found to have reached the heights and depths of lands uninhabited by man, such as the Alpine Peaks and Arctics Snow, as well as deep-sea sediments.

Nano- and Micro-plastics are ingested by various life-forms of the land, air and sea, as well as these micro-plastics inhaled by the human beings themselves, resulting in upper respiratory infections, exacerbating asthma, inciting pneumonic disease and even causing death, to which microplastic fibers were discovered within 97% of lung cancer tissue samples

[3]. Micro-plastics are further released from mass vehicular use, to which the increased speed at which tires tread upon the pavement (traction -to- friction), vast proportions of micro-plastics are released into the environment, harming land and life, as well as respired by the human being whom casually drives along with windows ajar, and is more so transported directly into the seclusion of the vehicle via the air-vents and other entryways

[4]. The ways in which one may mitigate the aforementioned effects, may simplistically be found amid heedful moderation and mindfulness of necessity. Electing to walk (when and if possible) and the utilization of mass transport (if one resides within an area to which such transport is provided and remains feasible), as opposed to the mere comfort of ones own vehicle, remains of great helpfulness, Correspondingly, byway of purchasing clothing and goods of sustainable long term value and of non micro-fiber material (if possible), as well as lessening the frequency of purchases not of pure necessity, remains of efficacy.

Symbol for Cause and Effect (Ursache und

Furthermore, installing a water filtration system (if possible), in turn mitigating and/or eliminating the purchase of bottled water, and as per food viability, simply being conservative with purchases (mindfulness toward overindulgence and/or being wasteful), ought surely encourage a positive effect.

Surely listing the ways in which humanity indirectly adds and/or directly causes environmental harm may be mentioned to no bounds, however it more so ought be deeply ponder by the human being, how it has become so vastly out of control, and seemingly unable to control any longer, to which the reason may be found amid the mere growing mass of overpopulation. While it remains debatable amid authorities how large a populace a square-mile of land may sustain, to which it remains asserted that suburban areas may sufficiently house up to 10,000 individuals, with urban areas exceeding 80,000 to 100,000 individuals, the fallacy remains in the mode in which this is determined.

This determination is not reached by virtue of the population value -to- resource value (quantity), that is factually and readily available within the vicinity of the square-mile, but rather on 'presumed' probability and/or possibility of resource importation into the square-mile vicinity.

If thorough consideration is given, this unequivocally stipulates that in the event of import/export shortage or crisis, resources remain unready available to the mass of humanity, to which hardship surely arises. This hardship was unambiguously witnessed during the peak of the COVID-19 Pandemic Crisis, to which many suffered food insecurity despite urban -to- suburban locale

[5]. (U.S. Global Leadership Coalition: COVID-19 Brief: Impact on Food Security). Nevertheless, food insecurity prevailed in all living areas, amid all demographics and across all countries. As suburban and underdeveloped rural areas (some acres upon acres), remain mostly comprised of residential domiciles, to which in exchange for such land-luxury, resources are placed much further away (generally not within a walking distance). While urban areas, which likewise remain of vast residential dwellings (many towered one upon the other), to which despite the markets remaining within a much shorter distance, the resource -to- populace values still did not equate.

Many reasoned this food crisis simply arose due to the high demand and/or a mere resource shortage, when in verity the detriment lies simply in 'too large' of a populace, within an area insufficient-in or depleted-of resources, thus with little to no resources to secure and/or sustain the populace, which continues to multiple, simply be housed one upon the other

[6]. When one heeds that 75% of the populace foodstuff derives of a mere 12 floral and 5 faunal species

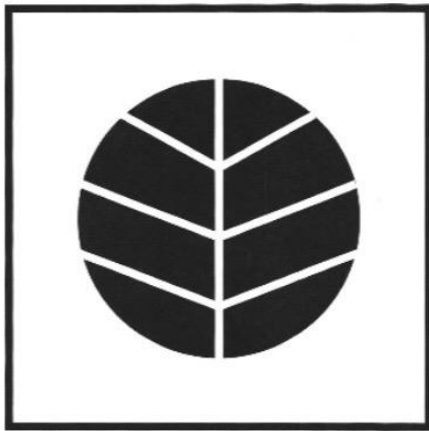

[7], likewise that whilst 71% of the earth's surface is comprised of water, a mere 0.3% remains usable water to humans, fauna and flora, amid a sole 29% of land surface as life inhabiting, an alarming realization as to just how limited resources truly are and likewise how vulnerable the global food system remains, leaves little to mystery, and when one considers the known lack of equitable access to these sources on a global scale, one may fathom why millions experience or perish from hunger, to which the presence of an overpopulation may not simply remain ignored, for under reasonable populace values, such starvation would not occur

[8]. Correspondingly, recent studies have concluded that due to the global rapidly-growing population, the amount of farmable land per persona has greatly decreased, due to the reason that humans continue to clear these lands to settle within them.

Since the last known ice age, one-third of worldwide forestlands and two-thirds of grasslands have been deforested and/or cleared for the settling of the ever-growing overpopulation, to which in consequence global essential biodiversity has been greatly hindered and in many regions entirely depleted, which ought awaken the human cognition to the clear presence of an overpopulation. As a direct consequence, an 85% decline in mammal biomass has ensued, to which on average 150-per day to upward of 75,000-per year, vast animal species succumb to extinction.

Extinction is further brought about via the woeful misdeeds of the human being, such as in the misconception of obtaining peace via war, to which vast proportions of land (and thus life), is destroyed and eradicated by this, likewise upon nuclear testing above land and below sea, the expanding of wastelands, power plant leaks, oceanic oil spills, increased global desertification, wrongful urbanization of alluvial and volcanic lands, etc.

Symbol for Life
(Leben)

[9] This annihilation of the environment further ensues with the use of pesticides and herbicides for the control of insects in commercial agriculture and horticulture, as well as within residential gardening (to which this is of great error), for insects remain vital to existence, as certain insects naturally regulate other invasive insects, as well as are dead-materials decomposed by them, which in turn returns nutrients anew to the soil, to which it becomes renewed (fertile), bestowing life to foodstuffs anew, yet as the extensive unnecessary and inattentive control of arthropods persists (the mass exterminating of all insects in vast areas), the lands grow increasingly infertile, to which the human being remains confounded as to the why!?

Humanity persists in disregarding that if the planet dies, so does the habitat of life-bringing acids, micro-organisms and insects, thus vegetation becomes less possible, to which animals whom rely on such become extinct, and ultimately the human being. One ought ponder how long may such misdeeds continue, to which the human being greatly multiplies, depleting resources quicker than they may regenerate and whether such regeneration remains possible any further amid vast regions where the lands and air have been toxified by the human beings via their mal-practices, before a complete economic collapse and/or environmental catastrophe occurs, which results in the extinction of the human species itself, as the human being may neither exist nor persist without living fertile lands, nor the fauna and flora alike!

One may question, what feasibly may be done to prevent such a catastrophe, to which the answer remains as simplistic as aforementioned in regards to the preservation of food and water (moderation and/or regulation), as well as the mitigation of the spread of toxins and plastics (heedfulness of necessity).

That a sufficient regulation ought ensue, to which the overpopulation is brought to a control (limiting and/or halting procreation for a time being, as needed), to justly permit the natural regulation (balance) of the population to unfold, as well as to permit the natural regeneration of resources to transpire.

Likewise that the human beings endeavor to do away with redundant constructs (i.e. unnecessary and/or excess places of entertainment, etc.) and restore arable and farmable lands to justly secure not only the human populace (but all life), amongst other similar beneficial and life-preserving actions which most certainly may be undertaken. However, taking this logical proaction remains of great difficulty for many to consider, as the fulfilling of the ‘wants ’and ‘wishes ’of humanity, prevails over what is truly just and of vital necessity to the whole of life.

Woefully the mass of humanity lingers in heedlessness of these great harms, and simply proceeds about the ebb and flow of the day, with concernedness mostly surrounding the own human life, with work and the enjoyments at the fore, likewise with the focus on acquiring all possible comforts and conveniences for the life, while disregarding what dangers these comforts and conveniences pose to all other life.

Whilst this may remain a rather unpleasant consideration, it rests evidently clear, that the values, morals and ethics to which the mass of humanity is driven has gone astray, to which woefully materialism (thus the comforts and enjoyments) are mostly and/or only regarded and sought, in such that the striving of many human beings (truly not all) has become none other than for the acquiring of money for the enjoyment.

Consequently, the lands, animal and plant kingdoms only serve as entertainment that appeals to the senses and as fleeting pleasures to most. This indeed remains of unpleasant truth for the human being whom reasons “I simply did not know”, to which in stern truth simply remains an endeavoring “to not know” and to merely move about to-and-fro unconcerned despite the known contradictions in which the entire world lingers, as it remains truly so that these truths can be neither ignored, unseen, or unheard

(i.e. Peace but War, Rich yet Poor, Abundance but Scarcity, Indulgence yet Famine, Privilege but Discrimination, Restoration then Annihilation, etc.).

Verily, explicating the myriad of ways in which humanity unheedingly hinders the longevity of all life upon this Fading Paradise may fill a library, however the primary cause undeniably endures in being Anthropogenic (human-caused), to which the ever-growing Overpopulation remains the greatest of detriment. However, as to whether this Garden of Eden is Saved lingers amid the strides of those whom recognize the responsibility both within and without themselves, to undertake what remains just toward the whole of the preservation of all life, and lovingly endeavors to awaken their fellow human beings with these illuminating words of truth.

The Wellspring of Truth Flows!

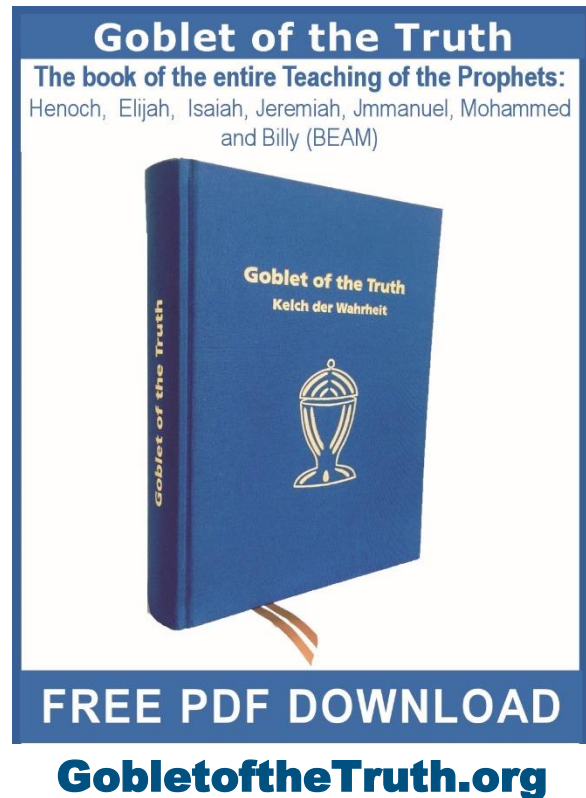

Goblet of the Truth

by Marilyn (Deren Leben die Liebe Erhell)
Kopczyk

It remains of great joy to make mention that since the unveiling of the dedicated Goblet of the Truth website www.GobletoftheTruth.org in January of 2025, many human beings have found their way to drinking from the Goblet of the Wellspring of Truth to which such essence of wisdom continues to flow across this wondrous Garden of Eden creation we regard as home. The Goblet's valuable works is presented crosswise the website in a sundry of ways, with the objective in mind of embracing our diverse populaces learning needs, which has indeed posed fruitful, with countless visitors utilizing and finding value in all formats, yet more so with visitors returning to the site repeatedly to continue on their quest for knowledge and truth. The website features a searchable online format, provided in both full German and English, to which the English format which incorporates embedded audios affords the alternative option to listen-and-read along.

Equally accessible for download are the dual-lingual German/English, German only and English only eBooks, as well as the option to purely audio stream the entire works chapter-by-chapter in English. Conclusively available are the mobile applications for Google and Apple (courtesy of Matthew Dippel) and similarly the Spaces app.

Additionally, for the hearing and visually impaired is offered a downloadable English ePub format for eReaders and soon to be released is the complete downloadable Audio aBook.

The Decline of Empathy within Human Beings

By Esmerelda Kopczyk

Before diving into the ongoing studies showing consistent decline in empathy within human beings and how it affects the entire world negatively, one must understand sympathy and compassion, which have often been mistaken for empathy and have led human beings astray in believing one does not in fact lack empathy which is the most important ability of the three. Another human being as it is solely feeling based (i.e. when one expresses misfortune and the other feels a sense of sadness, feeling sorry for, or even pity). One does not have to understand or go through the experience themselves to show and verbally express such emotions. Compassion, which is the strongest (most existent) of the three within human beings today, tends to originate from sympathy but also cultivates the desire to take action and help one through their hardships that caused pain and suffering, to alleviate them of such burdens.

“For the human being ego-love means that he/she places himself/herself at the centre of attention of everything, whereby in her/her blatant infatuation with his/her ego, as a result of lacking empathy for the fellow human beings and everything that exists, he/she only cares about himself/herself, therefore he/she neglects the others.”

“Billy ’Eduard Albert Meier

Narcissism in the current population has been on the rise due to the worldly changes in our current times, such as technological advances that have allowed easier access to huge social media presences on popular platforms, the consistent public posting of one’s own successes in life that have caused an increase in comparisons within those that may have not achieved such, who therefore now strive for those same successes or more, as well as societal norms displaying the importance of focusing inward to one’s own achievements and material desires that the human being is no longer focused outward to the next.

Narcissism is defined from six key factors such as having an exaggerated sense of self-importance, a need for admiration, a sense of entitlement, taking advantage of others, low self-esteem and lacking empathy for others. As well as the believed distortion “live and let live” which was once “live and help live” has been carried out through the actions of the human beings themselves.

So, what truly is empathy? It is the ability to understand and share the feelings of another. One does not have to physically experience something but is fully capable of putting themselves into another person’s shoes and feeling the experience in its entirety as well as the feelings of the other who actually had the experience. This does not require taking action to help alleviate someone, as does compassion.

This does not share the same feelings of pity, sorry or sadness for someone, as sympathy does. This is simply an understanding of another’s feelings, actions and perspective that does not solicit action or even advice.

One study between 1979-2009 showed a steep decline in empathy within human beings where 61 percent lacked the ability to empathize with their fellow human beings. In more recent times, between 2019-2022 (the core of the Covid-19 pandemic) it continued to drop by 14 percent. Being that the millennials (born 1981-1996) are the average adults of this current time, an additional study was done to show they had the largest decrease of 20 percent. More specifically, the decline in empathy has affected women more than men by nearly double; With men at 8 percent and women at 19 percent. With the explanation that as this becomes more predominant in the majority of human beings, as well as the way of our digital world and societal norms, it is becoming easier for human beings to become numb as they feel the world has become negative as a whole and if others do not care, why should they.

In order for human beings to master the skill of empathy, they must first have genuine care and concern for others. They must know how to actively acknowledge others and learn to listen without the desire to speak or be heard themselves.

True empaths are in tune with their surroundings, not just with their fellow human beings, but with fauna and flora as well, leading to deep connections with humans, animals and nature. Empaths have the capability of feeling the energy of all their surroundings due to being so aware.

Empathetic human beings are known to be

All human beings are encouraged to ponder how this has affected the world in its wholeness and how detrimental this has been to our planet and can continue to be if change within human beings themselves is not started now. If the majority of mankind is lacking the ability to empathize with their fellow human beings, has no acknowledgement or regard for our animals, plant life, nature and all that lives amongst us, does not have the will to change nor have the capability to teach their offspring or others how to empathize and show care for all living things, what will that look like in another 40 `years? 40 years beyond that? The time for change is now.

EMPATHY : the action of understanding, being aware of, being sensitive to, and vicariously experiencing the feelings, thoughts, and experience of another.

highly intuitive and sensitive, often needing negative emotions and energies to prevent emotional overloads or drained energy.

We Have Been Warned About the Danger of Overpopulation Since Ancient Times Yet the Majority are Still in Denial by Juan Coto

In the Talmud of Immanuel (TJ) by Judas Ischkerioth, Chapter 25 (The Prophecy) verse 36, Immanuel stated, “Since the human species at that time will consist of far more than ten times as many human beings as the Earth is able to bear without coming to harm (529,000,000), a large portion of them will be killed by infirmity (disease and plagues) and war and felony”.

With those words Prophet Immanuel gave humanity more than 2000 years ago an important warning on overpopulation which unfortunately resulted in a prediction in the present time.

Ptaah mentioned the definitions of a prophecy and a prediction on Contact Report 670, an excerpt of the article was published (Explanations of Content from the Contact Report September 1, 1948; Ghost ships, Kaventsmann, Mega Waves, Three Sisters , White Wall, Epidemic, Endemic, and Pandemic, Prophecies and Predictions), and stated the following:

- 1) “Since ancient times, prophecies have generally been issued only as warnings and therefore in a negative manner, the reason being that people should reflect on them and transform everything evil and negative into something better, good and progressive.”
- 2) “Prophecies are based on inspirations, dreams, visions, or probability calculations and reveal future events and occurrences that will result from certain behaviors, attitudes, speeches, and actions, etc, if these are carried out and maintained in an unchanged manner over a certain period of time, whereby the period until the prophecy is fulfilled can be short-term or even last for centuries or millenia.”
- 3) “However, if all the factors of events happenings, behaviors, attitudes, words, and deeds, etc., that are addressed by a prophecy are not maintained, but are changed for the better and for good, then it will not come true, because the changes will result in something beneficial, successful, fruitful, progressive, and valuable.”

Therefore, a prophecy is a warning that is mentioned to humanity so that corrective action/s could take place in order to avoid negative consequences, but if such warnings are not corrected, it becomes a prediction. As a result, it is the point of no return and the negative consequences are unavoidable.

Certainly, humanity has reached the level of overpopulation because it has been blinded for the most part by religions/cults for thousands of years. Indeed, Prophet Immanuel mentioned that religions/cults are a contributing factor in deceiving the masses, consequently the result of overpopulation in the present time. On the TJ, it states that the mighty ones in the government will be partly to blame for not educating the masses on overpopulation. Human beings are still responsible for their own education and evolution.

Below is an excerpt from the TJ (Talmud of Immanuel), Chapter 36, verses 21 and 22:

21. “In their confusion, the human beings will believe in this confused, self-thought-up, pathetic and false impression of the life (view of life), which will be produced through confused teachings of the cults (religions and sects) and through determinations of false human laws and changes in the structures of the rule in the lands (change of the mighty ones of the state).”

22. “Because the human beings will no longer comprehend (will unlearn) to know their own inner core nature from the creational point of view, they will compel their lives by external means according to their confused wills and will create descendants in excess (overpopulation), whereby the structure of the world and the nature and even much life and the order will be destroyed.”

Prophet Immanuel stated clearly the negative consequences of overpopulation. Overpopulation creates climate change and the fauna, flora and humankind will suffer the destructive consequences.

Prophet Immanuel stated on the TJ, Chapter 25, verse 51, “And consequently the weather will break down, and alternating severe cold and heat and much flooding will rule, and death will come a thousandfold over the human beings, the plants and animals, and over the creatures and over the Earth, as a result of the irrationally unleashed forces (Gewalt) of the human beings who live in too large of numbers (overpopulation) and in wantonness (greed) for might, addictions and vices, thus bringing destruction unto the end of the world (all around the world).”

Talmud of Immanuel (TJ) states on Chapter 36, verse 27, “And it will be that the number of human beings unto the ends of the world will come over (get out of control) to such an extent that the nature and the weather (climate) will suffer from it and break down, because every law of the nature will be disturbed, and its order will break down”.

Prophet Immanuel warned us that by an ever increasing overpopulation, the behaviors and attitudes of people would get out of control of the good human nature. In the New Time, one can observe that there are more people that have become indifferent towards other human beings and if a human being is attacked, rarely any help is given to deter the attack due to the cowardice of the bystanders.

Overpopulation is linked to the truth, therefore it is a term that is not disclosed in the areas of politics and religions. Both politics and religions are truly, areas of poverty of consciousness. These areas are aimed at manipulating and deceiving the masses. Religions could be described as the world's most effective and long lasting propaganda or matrixes of lies and deceit. Truly, what humanity needs to recognize is that only with the truth, humanity could think clearly and arrive at the corrective methods to deter overpopulation which is the biggest factor on the destruction of Earth and its life forms. Time and time again, knowing ones could see that religions/sects and politics lead to confusion, deceit and manipulation.

Excerpt from Pleiadian-Plejaren Contact Reports, Block 13, 579. Contact January 16, 2014:

Ptaah - "... It should also be considered that, due to the constantly uncontrolled growth of overpopulation, more and more people are falling prey to religious and sectarian delusions, which means that the malicious and aggressive vibrations in this regard are constantly growing stronger, affecting in particular those people who overestimate themselves and who are arrogant and uncontrolled. If there are now more than 6 billion people, or soon to be 7 billion, who have fallen prey to religious and sectarian delusions, then this number is growing by 70-90 million annually, according to the number of new believers who fall prey to delusional beliefs each year."

Billy- "These religious and sectarian vibrations are truly evil in themselves. But until the people of Earth understand this, a catastrophe will probably have to befall humanity in this regard as well."

The ever growing overpopulation causes more and more people to have more mental issues and weaker organs. Therefore, more and more people don't think for themselves and prefer to believe the lies from religions/sects, press and politicians. For the masses, it is much easier to blindly follow a belief or a lie, than to actually think about the facts and find logic. Criminality, wars, destruction of the environment, and diseases increase as the population increases. The religious vibrations makes negative effects much worse as the population increases as we have learned earlier.

Excerpt from Pleiadian-Plejaren Contact Reports, Block 11, 466th Contact Report, June 21, 2008, Pages 365-366:

Billy- "And until then, the people of the Earth will become increasingly alienated, indifferent, and brutalized, losing more and more of their social and governmental structure, causing many to slowly, but surely fall back to the lowest level of a regulated organization. And as I have written many times and also brought to the attention of the governments of many countries, all kinds of global evils are rapidly increasing with the uncontrolled growth of overpopulation. The streams of economic refugees from third world countries are slowly, but surely growing into mass exodus and migrations, as I predicted decades ago. And although this is now actually the case, those responsible for the world are not doing what is necessary to bring everything under effective control and remedy the evil. The same applies to the rise in crime and climate destruction in relation to overpopulation, because all those responsible for the world are just making big statements and promises and proposals that they can never fulfill. They are as dumb as a box of rocks and are incapable of considering that, in the time it takes them to remedy one evil, human overpopulation will increase again by hundreds of millions or even billions, thereby increasing all the problems, evils and destruction, etc., in relation to the growing overpopulation, nullifying everything that has been decided and making everything even worse. Not to mention that they themselves are incapable of implementing the measures they have decided upon because, in their stupidity and idiocy, they uselessly attempt to kill a giant dinosaur with a fly swatter with big words and unworkable decisions."

The Plejaren and Billy (BEAM) have revealed to humanity of Earth that in the present time, none of our governments have taken the corrective action to remedy the overpopulation problem and that their methods are useless. Truly, the Plejaren and Billy are given Earth humanity the methods needed for our own survival. Yet, the majority of humanity is in denial of overpopulation and elect politicians that are simply useless and incapable to think for themselves. Education is indeed the key to make the masses aware of the danger of the ever increasing overpopulation.

Excerpt from a letter written by Albert Einstein (1879-1955) titled “Why War?” to Sigmund Freud (1856-1939):

Albert Einstein-“Another question follows hard upon it: How is it possible for this small clique to bend the will of the majority, who stand to lose and suffer by a state of war, to the service of their ambitions? (In speaking of the majority, I do not exclude soldiers of every rank who have chosen war as their profession, in the belief that they are serving to defend the highest interests of their race, and that attack is often the best method of defense). An obvious answer to this question would seem to be that the minority, the ruling class at the present, has the schools and press, usually the Church as well, under its thumb. This enables it to organize and sway the emotions of the masses, and make its tool of them.”

In the present time, the matrix of lies and deceit from the religions/cults, politics, and the minority in power have been harming the masses for a very long time. One can deduce that overpopulation is not mention in schools, press nor by the governments because they need more and more people to fight wars and or pay taxes for the state, in other words, profits and might for the minority in power. Blind believers are deceived by the Catholic Church and disseminate false teachings such as, to multiply and multiply (procreate). Thus, following such reckless false teaching without any system of moderation relating to procreation.

Excerpt from “War is a Racket” by Smedley D. Butler (1881-1940):

Smedley D. Butler - “I spent 33 years and four months in active military service and during that period I spent most of my time as a high class muscle man for Big Business, for Wall Street and the bankers. In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism. I helped make Mexico and especially safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefit of Wall Street. I helped purify Nicaragua for the International Banking House of Brown Brothers in 1902-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for the American Sugar interests in 1916. I helped make Honduras right for the American fruit companies 1903. In China in 1927 I helped see to it that Standard Oil went on its way unmolested. Looking back on it, I might have given Al Capone a few hints. The best he could do was to operate his racket in three districts. I operated on three continents.”

Smedley Butler’s written work helps us see how the minority in power does their criminal deeds in such as way that on the surface things seem to take place in a business/commercial environment, but in reality it is a method of operation to steal resources from foreign countries. Indeed, it is a clever method employed by the minority in power and uses the press, the education system, and religions to manipulate the masses. Consequently, there are many know-it-alls that deny the reality of overpopulation on Earth.

Excerpt from “Confessions of an Economic Hitman” by John Perkins:

John Perkins- “The United States spends over $87 billion conducting a war in Iraq while the United Nations estimates that for less than half that amount we could provide clean water, adequate diets, sanitation services, and basic education to every person on the planet. And we wonder why terrorists attack us.”

Billy (BEAM) has mentioned that virtually every organization in the world is corrupt and that there are no true democratic governments in the world in the present time. This provides the informed reader that we Earth humans have much to learn and to correct ourselves to become a peaceful and responsible humanity. Humanity has to learn that overpopulation is the culprit that needs to be tackled first so other problems such as pollution, deforestation, reduction of farmlands, reduction of animal habitats, criminality, wars, illegal human migrations, among other issues could be solved.

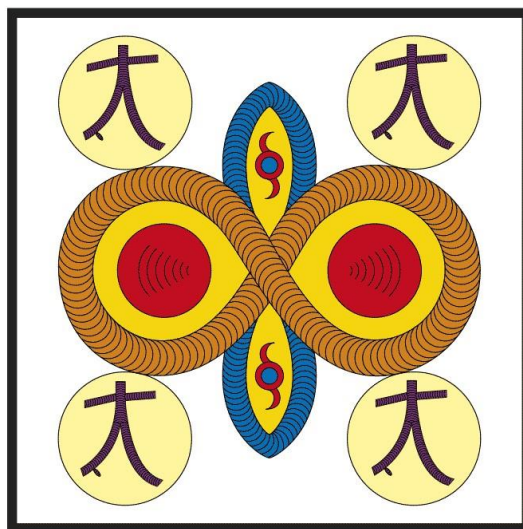

All governments around the world must educate the people that overpopulation is certainly a problem on Earth and that governments must create laws to reduce the overpopulation. It may take centuries or millennia to reduce the population on Earth in a natural manner, but steps must be taken to start as soon as possible before we see an atmospheric collapse. In other words, the atmosphere becomes so toxic that all life could perish.

Marriage education should be taught in the education system around the world so that couples become responsible human beings and procreate descendants according to the appropriate overpopulation reduction laws/regulations. Every 7 years, a compulsory birth stop must be implemented and only the couples that have been granted the marriage approval and with a procreation consent approval could have descendants. Christian Frehner (FIGU Core Group Member) suggested a system of the 7-year birth stop cycle on an article dated in the year 2008, "Population Growth Without Limit - An End to a Taboo Subject!".

Religions/cults have done so much harm to the masses and it prevents them from thinking for themselves and take corrective actions to save the Earth from destruction and save ourselves.

It is high time that Earth humanity wakes up and realize that Earth human themselves determine their future. Humankind is responsible for their own well-being, safety and destiny. Each individual human being is responsible for their own education, wisdom and evolution. - FIN

The Second Intention Fest by GD Greg Dougall

On September 28th, 2025, the FSGUSA attended the Intention Fest in Rhode Island. It was a wonderfully warm and sunny day at a gigantic state park, with a constant breeze. The group decided that nothing would be sold from our table, and we would not even have a donation jar. This simplified many things. We were there to focus on spreading the correct peace symbol, so we had various handouts, cutouts, and even custom t-shirts.

The t-shirts each had a different spiritual symbol on it, and the shirts helped us project a united group. We interacted with well over 100 visitors, perhaps several hundred throughout the day. Many were curious and engaged in long and meaningful conversations with us standing behind the table. We talked about the origin of the peace symbol, the designer Gerald Holtom, how he created it, and that he changed his mind after the symbol went viral.

We also spoke of usages of symbols and runes in the past, and had the book of symbols out for people to flip through.

The symbols with doves were also discussed. Handouts included stickers, business cards, and a custom booklet that the group put together specifically for this event.

You can read the booklet here:

<https://us.figu.org/wp-content/uploads/2025/08/wellness-meditation-and-peace-4.pdf>

This event had about 50 different vendors and 3 food trucks, and I estimated a crowd of 1500 to 2500 visitors throughout the entire afternoon. Massage tables, reiki, psychics, chakras, yoga, gongs, and acupuncture were some of the themes.

We discussed the meaning of the true peace symbol, the purpose of FIGU, several books written by Billy (BEAM), the peace meditation, and any other question that was thrown at us. We certainly planted the seeds of true peace, and I am proud that everyone in the FSGUSA worked together seamlessly to contribute to the event.

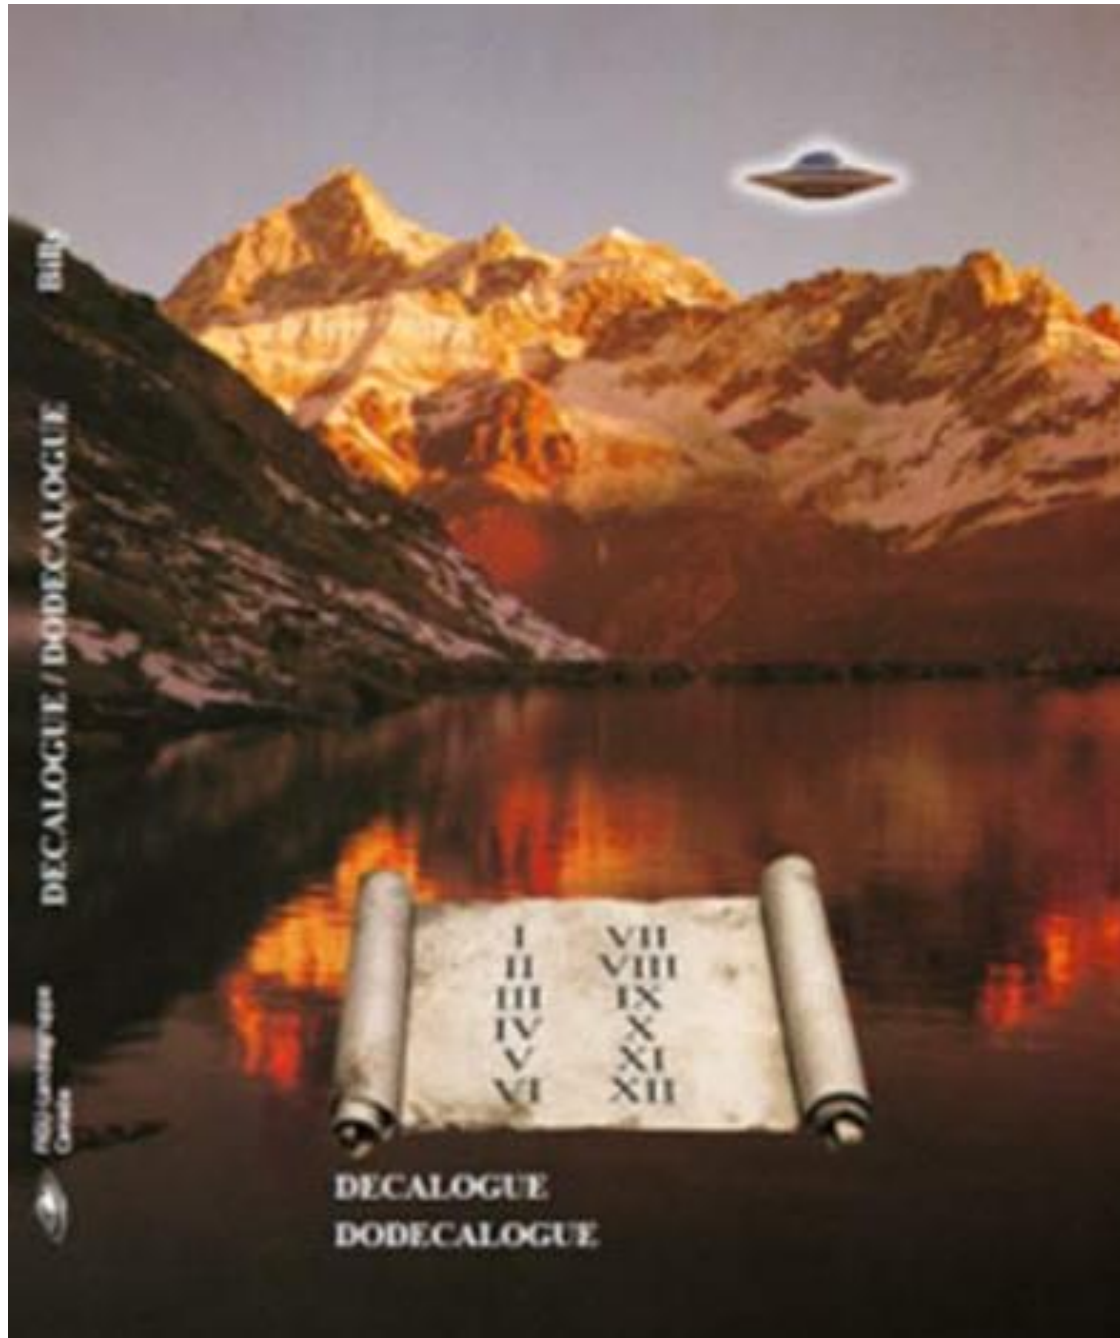

The t-shirts, the pamphlets, the stickers, the books, the handouts, the tables, chairs, the tent, and even the soup made for a tremendously successful and productive day. If you would like to help sponsor our next event, be it printouts, handouts, stickers, posters, table fees, or other expenses, you can make a financial contribution here: <https://us.figu.org/contact>

Reflections on Decalogue Dodecalogue

By Stephen Woods

On July 23, 2025 our study group sponsored by the FIGU Studiengruppe USA (us.figu.org) finished its reading and discussion of the book titled Decalogue / Dodecalogue written by 'Billy' Eduard Albert Meier.

My intention is to share my personal experience with others who may be interested in joining a future study group. Firstly, it is necessary to extend my sincere thanks to all those involved in providing this information to the public. From Billy and his teachers/mentors to the translators and publishers. I also want to thank everyone who participated in the study group, who gave their time, insights and love to the benefit of us all. The Decalogue (Ten Recommendations) Dodecalogue (Twelve Recommendations) was given to Billy in order to grant instructions for the human being, in a form that directly address him or her. These recommendations introduce us into the ways of truth and bring us closer to the light and love of Creation.

“The teaching of the truth and the truthly knowledge always finds a following; every human being strives consciously or unconsciously for truth and knowledge and finds others of his/her kind in relation to this”.

The Way to Live page 74 verse 101

In regards to the striving, it is essential that our striving be based on truth and reality, not belief. truth. The twelve recommendations listed in the book are essential for recognizing reality and once the truth of a recommendation is recognized it must be reflected upon in order to resolve and rectify our errors.

“For the human being, one form of the good fortune lies in him/her recognizing errors he/she makes and being able to resolve and rectify them, because, based in the recognition and rectification of the errors is the finding of the truth and of the knowledge as well as a great part, of the evolution”

The Way to Live page 156 verse 17

As I contemplated this process of problem solving, according to the recommendations, a simple formula came to mind:

Reflect: Through meditation on the recommendation reflect on where you stand.

Recognize: Your errors/shortcomings are brought to light.

Resolve: I like to call it re-solve the problem, solve the problem by recognizing the steps that must be taken to remedy the problem.

Rectification: The process of completing the steps needed to resolve your problem. This process leads to knowing the truth through the lived application and experience of the learned virtues.

Knowledge overcomes belief and leads to wisdom when applied to our life through the striving for that which is more highly developed.

If you are on the fence about joining a study group I would encourage you to join. The things I have been learning have been challenging, awe inspiring and life changing. I hope to interact with you soon!

Ancient Aliens LIVE by Greg Dougall

Four members of the cast of the History Channel cable television series Ancient Aliens are touring the United States to give a lecture and “victory lap” tour, and to meet their fans who are willing to pay extra earth dollars for photo opportunities, above and beyond the base ticket price of $74. The cast started with Stonehenge, a remote pacific island site, Baalbek, Lebanon, the Giza pyramids, Puma Punku, Bolivia, and Sacsayhuaman, Peru.

Their point was that the natives only had copper and bronze tools, and could not have carved hard stones such as basalt and andesite. In addition to the precision carving, they also pointed it out how difficult it would be to move such heavy stones over vast distances. I was disappointed they did not mention other megalithic sites from around the world.

They did mention Ptah, however. So they did in fact unwittingly mention a Plejaren.

<https://gregdougall.wordpress.com/2014/03/03/35-must-see-star-maps-wayne-herschel-the-hidden-records/>

Next they brought up the longskulls. The crew of Ancient Aliens make clear they will not say whether or not these are extraterrestrial humans. However, Billy clearly says that they were.

The cast mentioned the lon skulls were also linked to the Hittites and the Huns. Next they talked about Gobekli Tepe, but didn't really say much other than it's age being about 12,500 years old, which is significant, because most of us were taught that civilization only started 5,000 years ago.

In the show they talked about Dr. Michael Malin, a NASA researcher, who also investigated some of Billy's evidence, but they did not mention that part. When polling the audience if they ever saw a UFO, about 20% raised their hands.

They also discussed Ley Lines and the Nazca lines, which the Plejaren say have nothing to do with extraterrestrials. Next they plugged their spin-off series "Skinwalker Ranch” and Treasure or Curse of Oak Island, which I believe is total trash, and I admittedly refuse to watch any episodes of these.

In general it was a very basic talk, not going too deep into any one area, or providing any spectacular smoking gun evidence. The cast gave a lot of credit to Zechariah Sitchin and spoke of the Anunnaki, not knowing that they are a fictional race based on the sighting of the Hale-Bopp comet. In fact, it is the Sirian refugees who are the predecessors of the Sumerians.

Two of the cast gave tremendous credit to Erich von Däniken for getting them into the topic of ancient aliens through his books such as Chariots of the Gods. The cast spoke about Gilgamesh, but never mentioned that he too was (is) an extraterrestrial.

Ironically, Giorgio Tsoukalos, the originator of the series, grew up in Switzerland. He also spent 8 years in Ithaca, NY, so I am assuming he attended Cornell University. The series started in 2009 and has produced more than 300 episodes.

The one Ancient Aliens episode I ever watched in full, was a visit to several sites, which Billy clearly explained the origins of in one of his talks with Semjase. It also explains the Tridactyl cherubim found by researcher Jaime Maussan, which unfortunately was not covered in this lecture.

<https://gregdougall.wordpress.com/2022/01/03/2021-ancient-aliens-episode-lost-city-of-peru-explained-by-billy-meier-in-1976/>

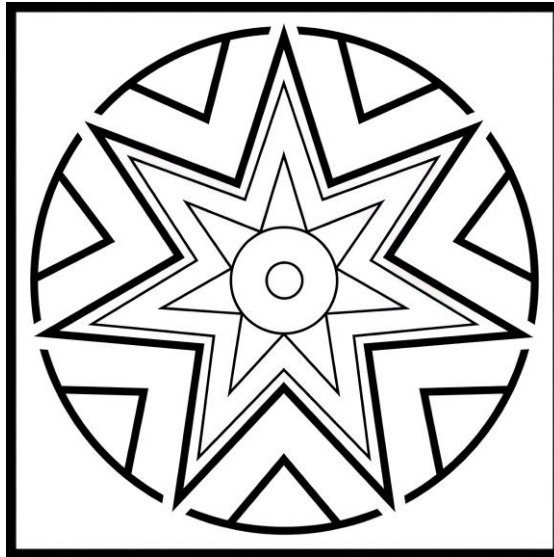

In conclusion the Ancient Aliens LIVE lecture was an extremely basic overview of ancient sites and stories that bolster the ancient astronaut theory, that advanced peoples came down from the sky, taught the natives new things, and then left, never to be seen again, but only remembered in stories, legends, and religions.

The cast of the show pointed out that ancient cultures often mentioned Sirius, Orion, and the Pleiades in their origin stories.

Ancient Aliens Episodes “Lost City of Peru” and “Beneath the Ancient Temples” explained by Billy Meier in 1976

Heaven or Hell are imagined by Christopher Chalfant

Heaven and hell are imagined, belief-delusional concepts created from the imagination of human beings which enslave consciousness. There has never been and never will be any verifiable proof that heaven and hell exist. These terms and concepts were created to enslave and are used in a fear based manner to make human beings dependent and follow something just as belief-delusional, an irrational teaching.

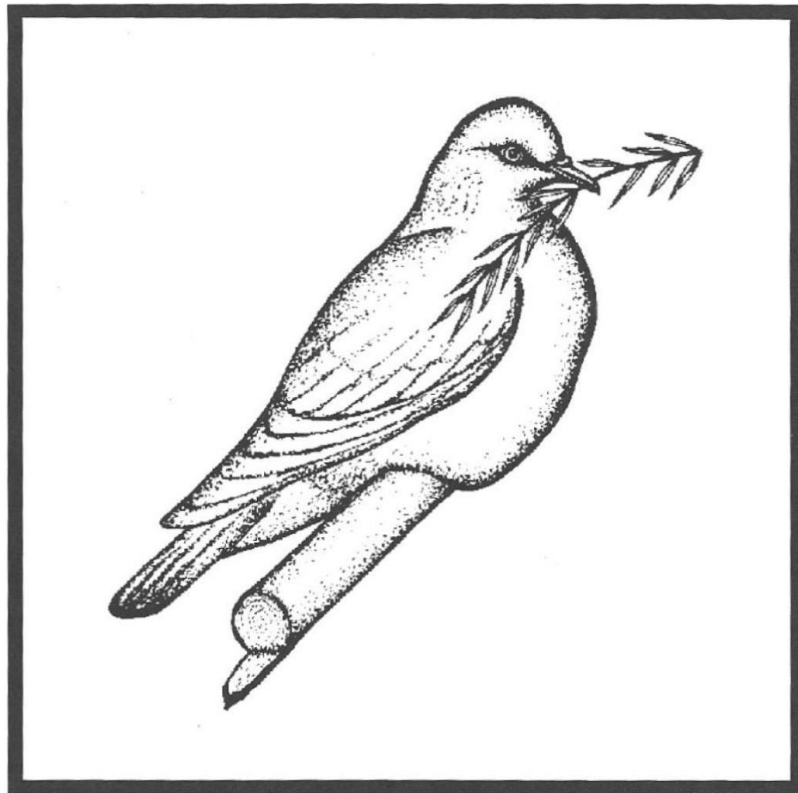

Shame, guilt, and fear are tools of manipulation and belief is the medium through which human beings fall prey and into a prison of distorted reality. So no heaven and hell do not exist, you will not be punished for making mistakes during the life after the life is over. In fact mistakes are apart of the process of life and evolution. Don't be afraid to make mistakes, recognize the fact there are consequences for our actions when we continue to make the same mistakes without learning from them.

There are no chosen ones because not one human being is more special than another, we are all uniquely special. All life respective to the form of consciousness lives in the same place during life and when it dies transitions to the death-life (beyond) where a processing occurs of the different levels and different forms of Creation-Energy: animal life, plant life, human life.

The personality of the human being is unique to the individual and only lives one 8me. First we can extrapolate this from observing children as they develop their own unique personality throughout adolescents into adulthood the en8re life. We can also understand that never are there two individuals you come into contact with that have the exact same personality. Since this dimension of reality life-dying is based on logic, reason, rationality, and a system of order, so too is the dimension of the death-life (beyond) and for that matter the spiritual realm.

Life is evolution in a cycle of becoming and passing based in love where the teaching of the truth, teaching of the life, teaching of the creation-energy teaches the nuances of this in great detail which I only vaguely touched upon in this article.

The Creation Energy Teaching -- Solution to end all Wars and Genocide on the Planet Earth Forever by M.R.C.

Peace Beginning to Exist -- Creational Symbols Library --
<https://us.figu.org/teaching/symbols/#jp-carousel-2580>

Since the dawn of human civilization as it has occurred a many number of times on this planet since the inception of civilized life, war has always been a topic of existence in relation to the many civilizations that have occurred. Whether the war was over a territory or as a part of a conquest for some greater expansion of an empire, dynasty, or kingdom, or whether the war was on behalf of some religious cause in the case of exterminating those who belonged to an opposing sect or religion, or whether the war was fought out of the sheer insanity and megalomaniacal greed and lust for power of a particular warlike individual, etc. etc., as many as there have been existences of these human beings, particularly on earth, but not limited to solely earth within the SOL system, war has shaped the development of political nations and nation-states of people a like, in the likeness of how they have risen, or subsequently, fallen, even to the point of complete annihilation and extermination. It remains to be seen, that until present, we have, unfortunately, not quite yet found the solution to these normalized acts of brutality against each other, because, we have not yet understood and given ourselves a reason to do so. Instead, we are perfectly content with the continued cycle of elite, dominating forces and powers creating problems such that they can be solved with war or so that war can be made into the proposed solution, and thus many of our perceived problems which we cast weight to remain fictitious, fabricated, and overshadow many of the real problems and issues which pertain to reality itself, like overpopulation, as an example.

Perceptible problems as a result, appear outwardly to pertain to and effect us as a whole when however in reality, only serve and benefit a select minority seeking increased power and profit on the grounds of increasing power and profit. As time unfolds, it becomes increasingly obvious to those who seek the truth that in fact our discover-able identity with Creation, renders itself as source of love identifying the equality of all life which remains as an eternal absolute, and itself dissolves the notion that war can be justified. Thanks to logic, It is clear that were we to learn and follow the teachings inscribed to the teaching of Creational-Energy, Life, Prophets and Truth etc., no solution would remain clearer, other than learning, studying, applying and ultimately discovering for oneself the truthliest truth of knowledge (regards to D.H.). Therefore, the solution is The Teaching of Creational-Energy, which is the antidote to and the solution which will ultimately end these acts of war and all other evils for good, and for the eventual day of peace, when it finally begins to exist. Many of the powers that exist in the world today, together, including the Western United States empire, commit atrocious acts under the guise of "Defense."

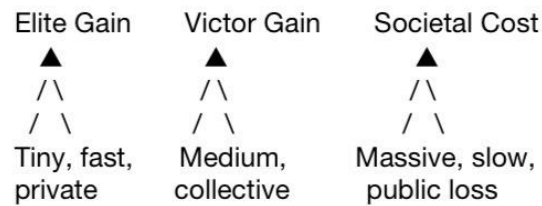

Wars are outwardly given the term war, when the necessary preparations have been made which allow this term to be accepted by nations, and usually politics are the instrument for which this can be deliberately achieved. In this case, the wars are many times framed in a way which would appear as like they are "in defense of Western democracy" or "in defense of peace" (which makes no sense) or even "necessary for peace and stability" when these wars are not an object of peace or necessary for peace whatsoever, and are not acts of defense, but motivated by sides that act aggressively in participation in the act of relentless Gewalt aggression towards one another which does not ascribe itself justly under true defense, because in reality it is not motivated on the grounds of defense of anything positive and beneficial for civilization as a whole. It is not to be said that there have never been instances of this, but simply as it relates to the majority of conflicts as they happen in cases which they are unnecessary. During the era of the child of destruction, or 666, the "department of War in the United States" was changed to "The Department of Defense"

What does that tell us?

Such examples which pertain to our timeline also fall into the category of what can be found in Novels such as 1984 by George Orwell, which elucidate how 'double-speak 'such as this real-life example are objects of Tyranny used to distort the masses from the truth such that they are brought into confusion about what is right and wrong in the world and thereby through confused speech and terminology allow for in-humanness and brutality to run rampantly as if it were the only form of correctness: what is believed or thought to be correct but which in reality is devoid of any logic.

Moreover, for the last 5,000 years -- the time period during which civilization outside of the Meier material has a record of human history, there has not been a single year during that historical time period where a single war did not occur. 100% of recorded history is marked by the occurrence of wars. Do historians use data like this to justify the notion that wars should be occurring today? "That's just human nature," psychologists will say, dismissing any refutations to the claim that war is justified based on a case of natural predisposition. We would not have the world we live in today without war," historians will claim, "that's why we need war." While it's true that war and conquest have shaped the modern-day borders and boundary-lines that define human civilization and provide a means for cartographers to make their detailed drawings on the forgotten globes of past, does that in any way justify the pretense that war should exist?

"Prolonged wars benefit no one."-- Sun Tzu

Well if war benefits no one, why do we do it? Who does war actually benefit?

War is beneficial based on the above model: Societal: For the society, war is never beneficial, as there is a systemic loss of life, treasure, and forgone civilizational progress.

Victor: For the victor-side in war, there is sometimes a benefit, but such benefit has not occurred since pre-1800s.

Elite: For the elite, there is always a gain that massively displaces any gain by other potentials involved. This transfer of profit from the ledger of broader society extracted through the destabilizing act of war on society to the elite class can be described as wholly parasitic, and when we analyze many of the motivations for war especially in modern times, there is always a motive behind the key decision-makers that involved profit.

So, at the expense of human life majority and overall societal progress, but at the gain of an elite minority, we allow this to happen? We educate that this is honorable, necessary, essential, justifiable... etc. list going on and on... ?!?!?!?!?!?!In America, we are taught that freedom exists only through war, or that "freedom isn't free," and that we should honor those who fought in the wars for the 'justice, 'that those wars served us; our society. But if war doesn't benefit society, including our 'free' society, then how can this be an exception?

Conclusion: War is NOT justified. It is not justifiable in any way, and it never ever will be.

When will there be a time for Peace to exist?

Can we allow peace to exist for the benefit of society at the EXPENSE of elite profit?

We need peace to exist now, and we need to get peace right, now. After 5,000 years of continuous war, there has never been a better time for peace, and to get peace right. For more information on Peace, please feel free to visit <https://us.figu.org/peace/>

Goblet of the Truth Chapter 7 Verse 157:

“Bestimmt euch Gutes in dieser Welt und kehrt euch ehrlich und reuig zur Wahrheit der Gesetze und Gebote der Quelle der Liebe (Schoepfung), also euch weder durch euch selbst noch durch euresgleichen (Menschen) irgendwelche Strafe trifft, sondern dass ihr umschlossen seid von einer allumfassenden Wohgeborgenheit, wie sie allen Dingen gegeben ist, wenn des Rechters getan wird, so, wie es durch die Gesetze und Gebote der Quelle der Liebe (Schoepfung) bestimmt ist.

“Determine what is good in this world and turn honestly and repentantly to the truth of the laws and commandments of the Source of Love (Creation), so that neither you nor your fellow human beings will be punished in any way, but that you will be enveloped in an all-encompassing sense of security, as is given to all things when justice is done, as determined by the laws and commandments of the Source of Love (Creation).

The Bio-life Rhythm of Plejaren Science: It's 2 Sines!

by David W. Hurlburt

Greetings! So, the fathom from CR 757 - and in the example below - is that the bio-force energy level of your life - PHYSICAL and INTELLECTUAL only. There is no 3rd emotional biorhythm, since emotions are preceded by thought. This was added on later as a belief. Additionally, Wikipedia and the New Age beliefs has looked at life from both sides now: one says it is pseudo science and the others have added 4 additional rhythms where none exist, thus confusing billions from utilizing this million-year-old Plejaren science, which was brought to Earth from 1888 to 1921 by Billy's first teacher, Sfath, to William Fleiss and Sigmund Freud.

PLEJAREN SCIENCE

RHYTHMS

Billy: “ The biorhythm swinging waves and their periods are unalterably the same for all human beings and cannot be changed or prevented by any intervention. The extent to which the strengths of these swinging waves are decisive for individual human beings is something that everyone can basically perceive, judge and utilise for themselves if they are mindful and align themselves with them ”

PTAAH: The force rhythm resp. bio-life rhythm of Homo sapiens in all 7 universes and all their dimensions and space-time continuums has a uniform period of 23 days, whereby 11½ days are exposed to a plus phase resp. an energy peak phase, a higher organic resilience and thus a less health-damaging possibility of attack, consequently the organism can use more active and resilient forces.

PTAAH: After 23 days the rhythm starts again from the beginning, whereby the thought-feeling-psyche state is also included, the period of which, however, lasts not only 23 but 33 days.

Sfath met with them for 33 Years!

PTAAH: 132.

What also needs to be said about what has been explained relates to the fact that this teaching of the bio-life rhythm is not based on an earthly or esoteric assertion, but is founded in a million-year-old Plejaren knowledge that my father Sfath brought to Earth and passed on as a teaching to the psychoanalyst Sigmund Freud and a doctor, Wilhelm Fliess, in 1888, with whom he maintained lively contact until 1921, as I have learned from his annals.

In the index of this book, Wilhelm Fliess calls it PERIODICITY. I saw no mention of Sfath, or anything we understand now in 2025. Apparently they were silent forever. WIKIPEDIA: Wilhelm Fliess (24 October 1858 – 13 October 1928) was a German otolaryngologist (ear, nose, and throat specialist) known primarily for his close friendship and intellectual collaboration with Sigmund Freud, the founder of psychoanalysis. Based in Berlin, Fliess developed several unorthodox and pseudoscientific theories, including human biorhythms (vital periodicity) and a supposed nasogenital connection—the idea that the nose and genitals are physiologically linked, leading to his theory of “nasal reflex neurosis.”

If the Creational Life Energy and the Teaching is ignored or unknown, it is easy to be a skeptic ...a materialistic custom of earth sciences. See <https://skepdic.com/biorhyth.html> for this and other FIGU-related topics such as Bigfoot, Pleiadians and...Critical Thinking, in which the site author Robert Carol defines as “The goal of critical thinking is to arrive at the most reasonable beliefs and take the most reasonable actions.”

However “This spiritual teaching of Billy Meier and the Plejaren extraterrestrials concerns itself with things which exist in reality, and which can sooner or later be discovered by every individual if sufficient effort is made to do so. It concerns the actual reality of Creation’s laws and thus also of nature’s laws. But religious teachings concern themselves with belief which requires no logical evidence and breeds up delusion which removes us from reality.

www.futureofmankind.co.uk/Billy_Meier/True_Love_has_its_Basis_in_Reality,_Not_in_Belief

133. Since then this teaching (Bio-Life Rhythms) has been preserved, although it has been questioned to this day by know-it-alls, negators and doubters, as has been the custom of Earth-humans since time immemorial, as you know, because the ‘experts’ appearing in this connection have to this day been unable to fathom or prove the correctness of the teaching, which they will also not be able to do for a long time to come.

Do see CR 757 for the entire dialogue, wherein is a summary from Billy.

Billy: Good. – Thank you. Then the following: The biorhythm with its swinging strengths begins at birth and oscillates in the same phases throughout life via the thought-feeling-psychological state until death, when the body decays and the entire organism dies respectively. The biorhythm swinging waves and their periods are unalterably the same for all human beings and cannot be changed or prevented by any intervention. The extent to which the strengths of these swinging waves are decisive for individual human beings is something that everyone can basically perceive, judge and utilise for themselves if they are mindful and align themselves with them. This depends on their attitude towards themselves and their personal behaviour. As he aligns himself with it, in a negative or positive wise, he strengthens or negates his biorhythmic vibrational strengths in relation to his overall discomfort or well-being, but also with regard to his mood and the resulting behaviour that he brings to bear towards fellow human beings and the environment as a whole.

So looking into the future for your health is possible - this will save you time, guesswork, and save you money as you may not go buy something instead of adjusting to your life rhythm with sufficient rest, diet and meditation.

David E. Chance

David Chance was well-known by many FIGU members around the world. On July 30th, David passed away in his home. He had used his professional skills as a librarian to organize and present much of the information Billy Meier has brought to our world, making it more readily accessible for everyone. We are grateful for the work he did. It was an immense contribution, well-respected by all who knew him. David Chance is survived by his wife and son in St. Louis, MO.

We will continue his legacy which helped organize the plethora of information presented in the Contact Reports.

The truth spoke and this is what it said: Put your awareness on me. I am alive. If you decide to take my hand I will teach you what is not within your experience. This will take you on a great journey which you must walk alone. What, how, and when will be your choice. My life will become your life, you will see through my eyes, you will feel through my sensitivity, and think in terms of reality. You will know true power and with this will come great responsibility.

FIGU Studiengruppe USA

Free Interest Group Universal...USA Mission statement ::

On January 28, 1975 began the public introduction to the most important mission of the new times.

Between 1975 and 1982 Billy Eduard Albert Meier was able to shoot over 1000 UFO/IFO clear and authentic photos and a few videos. This was just the icing on the cake. The Mission was and still is to establish The Creation Energy Teaching on Earth and anchor the proper steps towards a viable and efficient future evolution in true humanity as nature intended.

50 years later we are here as a part of our contribution to the global mission to not only celebrate this milestone but also to help in spreading True Love , Peace , Freedom and Harmony via learning and also spreading the Creation Energy Teaching and bringing awareness to the Overpopulation issue and also the correction of the Peace Symbol.

The teaching of Creation energy is extremely varied in topics, and its extremely many effects are so varied that one lifetime is not sufficient to grasp and learn it, and consequently it is to be studied and learnt again and again by each new personality. So with that in mind make the best of your current time as it is an investment into your evolution. Become the change you wish to see, study to the best of your ability and implement what you have learned and come to truly truly know . Knowledge of self and for self should be one of the most selfish things about your life.

The FIGU Studiengruppe USA is predetermined to support FIGU ,
The Plejaren and “Billy” Eduard Albert Meier in the on going mission to spread the Teaching of Creation Energy with keen focus on the might of the thoughts and psyche health and to implement the teaching in our daily lives, awareness about Overpopulation and the side effects of same as well as spreading the True Peace symbol.
